Forced Down, Swedish Pilot Saved by Ship Near Ireland

Gas Supply Exhausted, Bjorkvall Reported Uninjured.

Vessel Is Taking Flier to Valentia

By the United Press.

London., Oct 7.—Kurt Bjorkvall, Swedish pilot, tonight was rescued from the North Atlantic, 80 miles southwest of Valentia, Ireland, where his monoplane Pacemaker was forced down on an attempted non nonstop flight from New York to Stockholm.. He had covered less than two-thirds of the distance.

He was reported uninjured and to have been forced down because his gasoline supply was exhausted.

The French trawler Imbrim radioed the British air ministry that it picked Bjorkvall and his plane out of the ocean at 8:45 p. m. (3:45 p. m. Eastern standard time), 80 miles out from Valentia, off the southwest tip of Ireland.. The Imbrim headed for Valentia to put Bjorkvall and the plane ashore.

Frist Word From Flier.

The report from the trawler was the first word from the Pacemaker since it turned out over the North Atlantic from English Harbor, Newfoundland, at 6 p. m. yesterday. Fishermen all along the Irish and Welsh coasts had watched for sight of the plane throughout the day.

Bjorkvall left Floyd Bennett Airport, New York, at 7:35 a. m. (Eastern standard time) yesterday and expected to make the 4,500-mile flight to Stockholm in 34 hours.

As the hour neared for his expected arrival anxious crowds gathered at Bromma Field, Stockholm. Waiting there was his 16-year-old sweetheart, Maud Dickson, to whom Bjorkvall said he would announce his engagement upon his arrival.

Pilots Not Alarmed.

British and continental pilots who knew the smiling Swedish pilot, refused to become alramed about him as the hours went by without any word of sighting his plane. He is a veteran of 1,800 hours flying and has made daring rescues of skiing parties lost in the snow fields of the Swedish peninsula.

Bjorkvall elected at the last minute to fly alone, leaving behind Baroness Evan von Blixen-Finecke. He needed the room for fuel. He believed the 745 gallons of gasoline would be sufficient to carry him to Stockholm.

The wings of the Bellanca monoplane were packed with ping pong balls to give it buoyancy in the event it was forced down in the ocean. It was believed that these helped keep the plane afloat until the Imbrim reached it.

Details Not Available.

Details of the rescue were not immediately available. It was presumed the flier either sighted the trawler and landed nearby, or that having been forced down earlier he had flares or a light on his plane which attracted the Imbrim.

Straus Will Omits Gifts for Charity; Estate Tax Cited

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 7.—Increases in the State and Federal inheritance taxes led the late Jesse Isidor Straus, New York merchant and former United States Ambassador to France, to cancel 18 charitable bequests ranging from $335,000 down to $10,000.

Filing of his will for probate today disclosed that Harvard University and the Federation for the Support of Jewish Philanthropic Societies of New York City were among those cut off. Harvard was to have received $165,000 and the Jewish federation $335,000.

Straus, who died Sunday of pneumonia, named his wife, Mrs. Irma N. Straus, as residuary legatee. The extent of his estate was not shown, the valuation for probate purposes being set at "more than $10,000."

The will was drawn May 9, 1933, and the codicil revoking the eighteen charitable and philanthropic bequests was added July 31, 1934.

Straus explained:

"The present Federal and State estate tax laws impose substantially increased tax burdens upon estates of decedents and may, under certain conditions, cause undue hardship and financial sacrifice and loss resulting from the untimely sale and liquidation of assets of the estate to provide for the payment of such taxes.

"The increased estate taxes upon estates of decedents are devoted in large part to governmental social program.

"During my lifetime I have made substantial contributions to various charitable, philanthropic and educational organizations. Under the circumstances now existing I deem it advisable to cancel and revoke the bequests made by me."

Council Fought Security Act, Records Show

By Ernest Lamb.

Statements by Senator Robert F. Wagner and John G. Winant, resigned chairman of the Social Security Board, to the effect that the social security act, attacked by Gov. Alf M. Landon, candidate for President, had the support of the committee's advisory council are not supported by the published record of quotations from these experts, which showed that they opposed most of the major provisions of the act.

Not only did these experts oppose most of the act's major provisions, but the vast reserve fund to be lodged in the Treasury, one of the prime criticisms of the act's provisions, was introduced by the President through Secretary Morgenthau, after the bill had left the hands of the committee on economic security.

Thus this salient feature was never even reviewed by the Presidential advisers.

Submitted Over Protest.

The actual record of the hearings and of the bill's progress through Congress reveals that the President's Cabinet committee wrote the bill, sent it to Congress over the violent protest of his advisory committee, added certain provisions and finally got Congress to pass a bill that was not understood by most of the legislators.

This conflict in the record from the Congressional hearings with Gov. Winant's resignation speech and Senator Wagner's speech of last week may be developed as campaign material. Senator Wagner, in his speech, asked:

Questions Intent of Congress.

"Will the American people believe—does Mr. Landon really believe—that the 448 members of Congress who voted for this law, as against only 39 who opposed it, would participate in a fraud on the workers? Is it credible that William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor; George L. Berry, chairman of Labor's Non-Partisan League; Gerard Swope, president of the General Electric Co.; Walter Teagle, chairman of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey; Mgr. John A. Ryan, of the National Catholic Welfare Council; Grace Abbott, formerly head of the United States Children's Bureau; Barbara Armstrong, the University of California expert, and Frank P. Graham, president of the University of North Carolina, secretly conspired together to hoax the workers? Yet these were but a few of

Elliott Roosevelt Threatens To Sue Fokker for Plane Story

By the United Press.

Dallas, Tex., Oct. 7.—Elliott Roosevelt, son of the President, tonight threatened legal action against persons responsible for publication of material connecting him with deals for war planes.

Young Roosevelt denied emphatically that he ever carried out a contract with Anthony H. G. Fokker, Dutch airplane manufacturer, to sell American planes to European "or any other countries."

In Washington, Chairman Gerald P. Nye, of the Senate Munitions Committee, said a deposition by Fokker claiming contractual relations with Elliott, was made public "in the interest of fair play to all concerned."

The committee had voted unimously against further inquiry into the matter on finding that "no business was done" under the contract, feeling that public hearings "would result in smearing the President," Nye told reporters.

Elliott spoke of legal action in connection with stories published by Frank Tichenor, editor of the Aero Digest, and against Fokker, for a statement he made to the Senate Munitions Investigating Committe.

Roosevelt planned to come to his Dallas office tomorrow to consult with an attorney. Meantime, he said, the original contract with Fokker is being sent to him by Charles Michelson, publicity director for the Democratic National Committee, who has possession of it.

Elliott described the action of Senator Nye (Republican), North

Landon Scores Roosevelt View Of Bonus 'Debt'

Still Is Future Obligation, He Says; Scores 'Lack of Care' on Facts.

Text of Gov. Landon's statement—Page 28.

By the Associated Press.

Topeka, Kans., Oct. 7.—Gov. Alf M. Landon said today President Roosevelt is "so careless with facts and figures" that every voter should "get out a pencil and check recently issued New Deal figures."

In a statement issued on the eve of his fourth major campaign tour, the Republican Presidential nominee questioned an assertion by his Democratic opponent in his recent Pittsburgh speech and then, without mentioning Secretary Wallace by name, referred to the "recklessness" of remarks made in Iowa "by the President's agricultural spokesman."

"An ordinary knowledge of arithmetic, without even the use of a pencil," Landon said, "would show the fallacy of the President's recent statement at Pittsburgh that 'over $1,500,000,000 went for the payment of the World War veterans' bonus this year instead of in 1936,' and 'that

By Sidney Olson.

In a home-stretch drive for reelection, President Roosevelt will leave the White House at noon today for a nine-day stumping tour which will take him approximately 5,000 miles through ten States, nine of which are generally regarded as "doubtful."

Focusing his campaign efforts on the borderline States, the President will make two "major" speeches, two "regular" speeches and more than a score of back-platform appearances. The White House secretariat refers to "major" speeches as those made over coast-to-coast radio networks. One of these is to be given at Omaha October 10, and the other at Chicago October 14.

The other two addresses will be made at Denver the morning of October 12, and at Detroit the afternoon of October 15.

States to be traversed by the President include Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, Wyoming, Colorado, Kansas, Missouri, Illinois, Michigan and Ohio. Although each of these States gave the President a majority in

D. C. Judge Rebukes, Ousts Jury That Freed Death Car Driver

Sharply rebuking a Police Court jury, Judge Edward M. Curran yesterday ordered it discharged "out of service to the community at large" after a negligent homicide charge had been dismissed against Morgan Glaze, 27-year-old colored motorist. The case has been pending in the courts for 13 months, and had been continued on numerous occasions.

"I fail to understand how you arrived at your verdict," said Judge Curran when the jury, after less than 30 minutes' deliberation, had set Glaze free.

"It is not my custom to criticize the verdict of any jury, but the evidence here is indisputable.

"Whether it is because this is your first case, or whether it is an honest difference of opinion on the evidence in the case, I cannot agree with the verdict reached, and out of service to the community at large, this jury is discharged from further service in this court."

Glaze was charged with negligent homicide in the traffic death, more than a year ago, of Mrs. Mary Hausenfluck, 79-year-old widow of the Rev. John Hausenfluck.

The woman was injured fatally September 5, 1935, by Glaze's automobile as she attempted to cross the street in front of her home at 1303 Euclid street northwest.

According to evidence presented at a coroner's inquest September 9, Glaze passed to the left of the safety zone in which Mrs. Hausenfluck was standing.

Yesterday Detective Sergt. William Livermann testified Glaze was driving more than 20 miles an hour over wet streets at the time of the accident. Mrs. Hausenfluck was crossing on the green light, he added. After the crash, according to Livermann, Glaze admitted he saw her but was unable to stop.

The case was not called in Police Court until late last October. At that time Glaze, who gave an address in the 400 block M street

Suit for $500,000 Is Filed by Trainer Of Shirley Temple

By the United Press.

Hollywood, Oct. 7.—John Hays, Hollywood producer and trainer of juvenile actors, tonight filed suit for $500,000 damages and an accounting of the earnings of Shirley Temple, child actress.

He named in the suit the 7-year-old screen star, Mrs. Gertrude Temple, her mother; G. s. Temple, her father; the Fox Film Corporation, Twentieth Century-Fox and the California bank.

Hays declares in his complaint that he discovered the child actress, trained her for pictures and developed her into a "$5,000,000 personality, internationally recognized."

He said he entered into a contract January 23, 1932, to train Shirley in dancing, singing voice culture and drama.

He said the contract provided he was to have her services until January 22, 1934, with a two-year option. He charged the Temple family broke the contract October 1, 1933.

Hull Answers Landon, Hails Trade Pacts

Excerpts from Secretary Hull's address—Page 9.

By the United Press.

Minneapolis, Minn., Oct. 7.—Secretary of State Cordell Hull tonight replied to Gov. Alf M. Landon's charge that the Roosevelt Administration's reciprocal trade agreements had "sold American farmers down the river."

Hull, speaking in the same community where Gov. Landon made his attack, defended trade agreements as "treaties of commercial peace" and answered specific attacks by the Republican Presidential nominee.

"It needs no defense beyond a fair and honest examination of the facts," said Hull of the reciprocal trade idea and its application in 14 agreements. More than any other person in the Administration, he is "father" of the reciprocal trade policy.

The Secretary said he deplored and resented "any attempt to sacrifice to selfish greed or to narrow partisan advantage the welfare of our Nation and the great cause of peace."

He said the trade agreements were "the only practical and efficient means of overcoming the extreme emergency" confronting the Administration when it took office in 1933.

"The important question before us is not whether babassu nuts remain on the free list where they always have been." Hull said in a copy of his speech released before delivery. "It is not whether we should continue to permit the entry of a very limited amount of Canadian cattle at a reduced but still substantial duty.

Balanced System at Stake.

"It is whether we are to regain a balanced and stable economic system in which all parts of American production can co-operate prosperously, or whether we shall have a crippled and unstable system. It is whether we shall permit those branches of American farming and industry equipped and accustomed to sell part of their product to other countries, to do so and be paid for that product; or whether we shall make it impossible for these branches to trade, and throw their land out of production and their people out of work and so depress conditions throughout the country.

"The latter course will mean continued burdens on the taxpayer, continued governmental intervention to deal with surpluses. It will lead American industries into an intensified fight to control the shriveling opportunities to export by controlling the Government. It would invite regimentation."

Hull agreed with Gov. Landon that the American farmers had been "sold out" but he contended that the selling was done in the Smoot-Hawley tariff during the Hoover Administration.

"Gov. Landon has permitted his views and his utterances to be shaped by the same interests that were behind the Smoot-Hawley tariff," Hull said.

"The very authors of the farmers' ruin prior to 1933 now ask him to turn on and smite the Roosevelt Administration with full knowledge of the incalculable service it has rendered the farmer.

Would Be Sham, Fraud.

"I repeat that the Governor, in his Minneapolis speech, after paying lip service to the principle of foreign trade and tariff reciprocity, declared his support of principles

Step Injects Italy Into Army Feud

Fey, Ousted as Leader, Challenges Enemy to Fight Duel.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Oct. 7.—Premier Mussolini today stuck his finger in the pepper pot of Europe with a demand, informed sources said, that Austria give complete control of the Heimwehr to his friend, Prince Ernest von Starhemberg.

Austria's state secretary for special affairs, Guigo Zernatto, was recalled hurriedly to Vienna after a telephone conversation with Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg during which Zernatto was understood to have relayed Mussolini's wishes on the future Austrian policy as it involved Germany and Italy.

Informed persons said Il Duce expressed positively his displeasure over the Austro-German reconciliation treaty signed in July, believing it was indicative of increased Nazi sympathies.

(In Vienna, however, it was said in official circles that the treaty had done nothing save stem the influx of Nazi propaganda and that Austrian-Italian relations never were better.)

Fey Ousted Last Week.

Mussolini's reported demands for the installation of Starhemberg as Heimwehr chief would inject Italy directly into the longstanding feud between Starhemberg and Maj. Emil Fey, ousted last week from the private army at Starhemberg's instigation.

With Starhemberg as the supreme head of the private army, informed Italian circles said, Italy would feel that Austria had her best guarantee of security.

It also was expressed privately that Chancellor Schuschnigg was awaiting outcome of the Fey-Starhemberg feud to install the ultimate victor in a key cabinet post.

(In Vienna tonight it was said that Austrian relations with both Germany and Italy would be discussed at the November meeting of the "Rome protocol countries.")

With the Austrian situation uppermost in official circles tonight, it was also reliably asserted Mussolini was grooming his son-in-law, Count Galeazzo Ciano, as his eventual successor.

Ciano, at present foreign minister, would be placed at the head of the cabinet, informed sources said, while Il Duce would retain his dictator's title, "Capo del Governo" (head of the government).

Count Ciano has occupied high governmental positions since he was married to Il Duce's daughter. He formerly was propaganda minister. He was decorated for aerial action in the Ethiopian campaign, and his admirers hold he possesses many qualities similar to those of Mussolini.

Fey Sends Second.

2 Dictators Add Fuel To European Cauldron

Dictators Benito Mussolini of Italy and Joseph Stalin of Russia yesterday stirred anew the world-wide conflict between fascism and communism.

A spokesman for Stalin, accusing Germany, Italy and Portugal of giving military aid to Spanish Fascist insurgents, warned Russia would end its participation in the European neutrality agreement "if violations are not stopped immediately."

The Russian ultimatum brought deep concern in European capitals. In some League of Nations circles the opinion was expressed it might be only 24 hours before an event of major importance to European peace would take place.

Meanwhile, Stalin pursued the Communist Party "cleansing" with the arrest of Karl Radek, once secretary of the Communist International, on charges of subversive activities.

Rebels Ridicule Madrid Defense On 'Impotence'

Advance Halted Purposely to Test Foes' Strength, Insurgents Claim.

Burgos, Spain, Oct. 7 (AP).—Insurgent military leaders tonight taunted the Socialist government for "impotent" counter-attacks on the Fascist troops slashing toward Madrid.

The insurgent advance, they said, has been delayed purposely to see what strength the Madrid goverment could muster against them.

The counter-attacks were ineffective, the rebels said, and the big push on the capital is now under way, with its most advanced units only 20 miles from the objective and still driving forward.

Gen. Francisco Franco, supreme military leader, was said tonight to be concentrating his troop movements on Madrid itself, believing the government-held cities of Bilbao and Santander would fall before units of Gen. Emilio Mola in the northeastern sector near France.

The final assault upon Madrid gates probably will be launched this week-end, the insurgent leaders declared, if their troops continue the speed of their present drive.

Rebels tonight were encamped in Santa Cruz del Retamar area, their detachments patrolling the captured towns of Santa Cruz, Huescas, Fuensalida and Portillo on the southwestern Madrid front.

The strategy of the attack, the insurgent leaders said, was to clear

Portugal Charged With Open Violation of Neutrality Rule.

Germans, Italians Also Are Accused

Will Abandon Treaty If Assistance Keep Up, Russia Declares.

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, Oct. 7.—A Soviet ultimatum tonight announced Russia would abandon the Spanish nonintervention pact unless "assistance to the rebels ceases forthwith."

The ultimatum, announced in Moscow, was sent to other members of the neutrality committee in London.

"The Soviet government," a communique said, "declares that if violations of the agreement are not stopped immediately it would consider itself freed from the obligations contained in the agreement."

Russia signed the nonintervention agreement August 13.

"The Soviet government cannot consent to conversion of the noninterference pact into a screen for concealing military assistance rendered the rebels against the government by some participants in the pact of nonintervention," declared M. Kagan, Russian delegate to the London conference.

Kagan further charged Portugal with open violation of the agreement, and made specific references to German and Italian munitions reaching the Spanish insurgents.

"From the beginning of the conflict," Kagan's statement declared, "the Portuguese frontier has been the insurgents' base. Rebels formed themselves into detachments in Portugal and received military supplies from there.

"The rebels now possess many bombing planes of German and Italian origin which did not belong previously to the Spanish army.

"The testimony of witnesses proved that supplies of arms from Portugal continue.

"On September 10, 14 planes from Hamburg were sent to Seville through Portugal.

"On September 20, 12 large German planes were sent to Seville.

"On September 27, the Spanish government received a report that poison gas of Italian origin had been sent from Lisbon to the Spanish frontier."

Serious Development Awaited.

Geneva, Oct. 7 (AP).—Some League of Nations sources expressed the opinion tonight an event of serious importance to European peace might occur within 24 hours as the result of Russia's warning she might end her collaboration in European non-intervention in Spain.

Particular concern was voiced in these circles regarding the effect the announcement might have on the stability of the French People's Front government of Premier Leon Blum, which gained power through a temporary alliance of Socialists, Communists, Radical Republicans and other groups.

Berlin Voices Fears.

Berlin, Oct. 7 (U.P.).—Russia's note regarding intervention in the Spanish civil war was considered in political quarters here as confirming the German view that Russia was seeking to provoke a European war in order to spread bolshevism throughout the continent.

Germany has maintained for some time that Russian and certain French quarters already have intervened in favor of the Madrid government, hence non-intervention always has been "illusionary." Nevertheless, an open declaration of intervention by Russia would be regarded here as a grave development.

War Scare Looked For.

London, Oct. 7 (AP).—Russia's precipitous accusation that Germany, Italy and Portugal have violated the agreement for non-intervention in Spain probably will split the neutrality plan wide open and produce another European war scare, usually informed observers said tonight.

The French and British face the prospect of standing by in mingled chagrin and anger as they see their carefully nurtured plan to prevent Europe from splitting up into Communist and Fascist blocs fail, these sources said.

Unless Britain and France are able to calm the Soviet and the three nations accused by Russia at Friday's scheduled meeting of the

Two Impoverished Sisters, Unable to Meet Loan From HOLC, Await Eviction From Family Home

By Edward T. Folliard.

A couple of bewildered spinsters, whose colored servant refuses to leave them because they are "quality folk," sat in their 15-room house at 7 West Kirke street, Chevy Chase, Md., last night, counting the days until Uncle Sam, in the role of landlord, shall dispossess them. They have been given a month of grace.

The Misses Katherine Gideon Colt and Alice Ely Colt—the first-named 68, the other a few years younger—moved into that house in 1907. Romance, they must have known, had passed them by even then, and it looked as if the house, with its ancient, hand-made piano, its stiff-backed, flowered furniture and its gallery of ancestor portraits, would be theirs to the end of their days.

However, something that happened in Wall Street in 1929 was to have a disastrous effect on the spinsters of Kirke street.

Their modest inheritance was shattered. In the gloomy years that followed they had to take steps to save the house; to satisfy two mortgages with which it had become encumbered.

Friends told them about the Home Owners Loan Corporation, a New Deal agency created to handle just such dilemmas. They applied to the HOLC and obtained a loan of $9,551.86. The specter of the auctioneer and his red flag disappeared.

That was in November, 1933.

Last Monday the auctioneer appeared, and this time he was no spectral figure. The Colt sisters had defaulted on their loan from the HOLC, and the HOLC found it necessary to take over the house.

Now Miss Kate and Miss Alice have a few days less than a month in which to get out. What they will do, where they will go—these are questions yet to be answered. But it isn't these that account altogether for the sisters' bewilderment.

After they had obtained their loan from the HOLC, they had a plan whereby they would meet the payments. They would take in roomers. There were at least seven bedrooms that might be rented out to "desirable guests." But first some repairs were necessary. A new furnace was needed to keep the roomers warm, and new baths would have to be installed.

Charles West would help with the roomers. Charles is the venerable colored man who came to Washington in the 80's as coachman for John W. Foster, President Benjamin Harrison's Secretary of State, and who later became a house man for the Colts. He hasn't drawn any pay from the Colt sisters since they lost their wealth, but he still is with them, earning money on the side by serving a "gentleman" who lives nearby.

Charles would help, the roomers would come in, and everything would turn out all right in the end. But there remained the problem of the new furnace and the additional baths. These would cost money.

What appeared to be the answer to the problem came in the spring of 1934, Miss Kate said last night. The HOLC, she said, offered to lend them money for necessary repairs. The offer, she explained, came without their even having asked for a loan.

They put in their application for the loan, Miss Kate said, approved all the plans for the repairs, and looked ahead to the day when the roomers would come in and the house would be saved.

"But they never loaned us the money," Miss Kate said. "I don't know why, and nobody else seems to know. Now the house is gone.

"Yes, we defaulted on our loan. But I am wondering if somebody else, the HOLC, didn't default on a promise."

Miss Kate and Miss Alice had come down the staircase after Charles, who is older than they, had announced the caller. The interview took place in the living room. On the wall was an oil portrait of Grandfather George Gideon, dressed in the fashion of Andrew Jackson's day. He was the son of Jacob Gideon, a publisher, who came here in 1810, 10 years after this became the Capital City.

Labor to Spend Million to Keep Roosevelt Rule

By Felix Bruner.

Union labor organizations expect to spend more than $1,000,000 in their drive to re-elect President Roosevelt, George L. Berry, head of Labor's Non-Partisan League, revealed yesterday. Of the total amount, Berry said, $350,000 will be spent through the league's national headquarters here and the remainder will be spent in the States by local branches of the league.

Berry also revealed that among the speakers campaigning directly under auspices of the league were Senator Couzens (Republican), Michigan, defeated for renomination after he indorsed the New Deal; Senator Norris (Republican), Nebraska, who has New Deal support in his campaign for re-election; Fiorello H. LaGuardia, New Deal Republican Mayor of New York, and Senator La Follette (Progressive), Wisconsin.

The biggest contributors to the league's war chest, according to Berry, are the United Mine Workers of America, headed by John L. Lewis, who also is head of the Committee for Industrial Organization; the Ladies Garment Workers, headed by David Dubinsky, now a storm center of Communist charges; the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, headed by Sidney Hillman, and the Brewery Workers.

Pledges $25,000 of Own.

Berry revealed that he personally had pledged $25,000 of his own money to help finance the campaign and that he had thus far turned over $5,000 to the league. Berry is president of the International Printing Pressmens Union. No money, he said, is being contributed to the Democratic National Committee and no funds are being received from the national committee.

The biggest disbursement, Berry said, is for time on the radio. He said the league has paid a broadcasting company $92,000 for 15 minutes a night, five nights a week, until election. The time is being shared by the Good Neighbor League and the La Follette Progressives. Berry estimated total expenditures for radio at $125,000.

The league head said that besides President Roosevelt the only candidate receiving the active support of the league is Senator Norris.

Sure Roosevelt Will Win.

Berry, in a formal statement, said there was no longer any doubt that President Roosevelt would be re-elected.

"President Roosevelt will carry both New York and Pennsylvania," he said, "either of which would give him an ample margin. He will carry Illinois surely and safely. We believe he will carry Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and everything west of the Mississippi River."

In a radio speech last night, Berry defended Dubinsky and Hillman, both of whom are Roosevelt electors on the New York ballot, against charges of communism.

"Foes of Communism."

"American labor has held the front-line trench against communism ever since communism became an issue, and among the most valiant of all our labor men in the holding of that front-line trench have been Mr. Hillman and Mr. Dubinsky," he said. "They have been unflinching and uncompromising foes of communism and I happen to know what I am talking about.

"One of the vital reasons why Mr. Hillman and Mr. Dubinsky support Roosevelt and oppose Landon is their clear understanding that the election of Landon would put the Nation in jeopardy of a really dangerous Communist movement, from which our democracy might not survive."

Berry said Hillman and Dubinsky were "honored and vigilant members of Labor's Nonpartisan League."

Statement Filed.

Simultaneously with Berry's estimates of the league expenditures, the league filed with the House of Representatives a statement showing that up to September 1 contributions totaled only $28,145 and expenditures $16,644. Of the receipts, the report showed, $15,000 came from the United Mine Workers of America. Contributions also included $5,000 each from the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the Ladies Garment Workers, and $2,745 from the Tennessee home of the International Printing Pressmen's Union.

The league's expenditures, the report showed, included $500 on June 5, which was sent to Crampton Harris, Birmingham, Ala., to aid the Congressional campaign of Luther Patrick, who defeated Representative Huddleston. Berry said that since this contribution was made the league had changed its policy and was not supporting Congressional candidates.

The report showed that the league paid $1,000 for a box at the Philadelphia convention.

Berry said:

"We were talked into that."

Seafood Industry Loss On Sewage $1,500,000

Norfolk, Va., Oct. 7 (AP).—Damage to the seafood industry in the Hampton Roads area from sewage pollution will total $1,500,000 a year, Richard Armstrong, chairman of the Commission of Fisheries, estimated in a letter to the Hampton Roads Sewage Disposal Commission.

The commission, which is attacking the problem of sewage pollution, has set aside $4,000 with which to pay for a preliminary survey to determine the cost of installing adequate sewage disposal facilities.

Hull Has Attained Measure of Success in Fight for Prosperity Through Trade Pacts.

By Franklyn Waltman

FEW statesmen who have fought on behalf of righteous but unpopular causes, remain in public life to witness the triumph of their efforts. Vindication most often has come to them, if at all, after their departure from the current political scene, sometimes broken-hearted men; or even after they have departed from this world.

WALTMAN.

Consequently, Secretary of State Cordell Hull must have felt a peculiar sense of satisfaction over the world developments of the last two weeks, when he appeared on a platform at Minneapolis to open the defense of his reciprocal tariff program in the first real political test that confronts it.

Mr. Hull, it is true, has not yet seen the final triumph of his years-long and passionate efforts to lead the world back to prosperity and a permanent peace by breaking down trade barriers and stimulating world trade. But enough has happened to make him a happy man, hopeful of attaining success in a fight which seemed all too hopeless a few years ago.

He has witnessed a part of the press supporting Gov. Alf M. Landon, the Republican Presidential nominee, disagree with their candidate when he assailed the Hull program. He has seen outstanding Republicans applaud his ideas, although disagreeing generally with the New Deal. He has seen all this in a country committed to high protective tariffs as recently as 1930.

Undoubtedly more encouraging, however, to the elderly Tennessean has been the swiftly moving developments of the last two weeks abroad. There he has witnessed nations which took the lead in striving for self-sufficiency and economic isolation and which two years ago scoffed at him as a Utopian dreamer, halt in their courses and take the first steps back to a freer movement of world trade.

And he has witnessed within the last two weeks the economic committee of the League of Nations applaud his ideas and come to the defense of the very heart of his program, observance of the unconditional most-favored-nation treatment—which Gov. Landon had sharply denounced.

* * *

That such developments should have come on the heels of Gov. Landon's assault on the Hull program was a misfortune for the Republican nominee but a stroke of luck for the Secretary of State and the Roosevelt Administration. What has occurred in the last week is to the credit of Secretary Hull and his unyielding faith in the righteousness of the course he preached.

President Roosevelt deserves none of that credit; for it is well known that under the influence of the advocates of a domestic planned economy and economic isolationists, he looked on the efforts of his Secretary of State with a fishy, not to say scoffing, eye. Indeed, it was not until his Chautauqua speech last August that Mr. Roosevelt gave whole-hearted indorsement to the program.

Nevertheless President Roosevelt will reap the credit for the wisdom of his Secretary of State because Gov. Landon, apparently in his zeal to get farm votes and win the favor of George N. Peek chose to assail this worth-while policy of the Roosevelt Administration.

Indorsement by the League committee of the most-favored-nation treatment principle is regarded as especially significant. The principle means that any concession granted by the United States to any country will be extended to all nations granting to us equality of treatment in trade relationships.

Gov. Landon, apparently relying on Mr. Peek for guidance, termed this principal "another major shortcoming" of the Hull agreements, and asserted that this principle when widely followed by leading commercial nations "is a proper and wholesome way of promoting international trade."

"But," he added, "today most nations have ceased to use the principle. In consequence, when we apply it, we are making a concession to foreign nations without getting anything in return. This is not reciprocity. It is charity paid for by American producers."

Most of the authoritative economic thought disagrees with Gov. Landon in that contention. In March, 1933, the Tariff Commission in a report to which it is assumed the three Republican members subscribed, since no dissents were attached, recommended as the first point in a list of relevant ways and means of tariff bargaining, that it should be conducted "as far as practicable on the basis of unconditional most-favored-nation treatment."

The economic committee of the League of Nations, in its report just made public, asserted that "the most-favored-nation clause and the system of equality of treatment which it is designed to establish constitute an essential guarantee for the maintenance and development of world trade."

"In this connection," the committee added, "it is important to note that the clause has in no way ceased to function, but still continues as the underlying principle governing commercial relations between many countries."

In substantiation of this latter contention, trade experts in the State Department assert that two-thirds of the volume of world trade is carried on by countries which operate under this principle of equality of treatment, including the United Kingdom, all the British dominions except Australia, Sweden, Norway and Japan, none of which have imposed quotas or exchange controls. Meanwhile France, Holland and Switzerland—perhaps later on Italy—have commenced the process of economic demobilization.

And Gov. Landon is incorrect when he says that "we are making a concession to foreign nations without getting anything in return." We are getting in return from the nations which engage in more than two-thirds of world trade equality of treatment in their relations with us.

Refuse them equality of treatment in our ports and we forego the right to equality of treatment in theirs. Whenever they make a concession to a third nation it is given also to us. Abandon that principle and foreign trade, as Secretary Hull said, would become "merely a business of cut-throat bargaining and bartering on an ever-narrowing scale."

Gov. Landon might well ask himself: What price Peek?

U. S. Will Meet Pacific Threat, Swanson Hints

British concern over the possibility of a race to fortify Pacific naval bases was answered informally yesterday by Secretary of the Navy Claude Swanson in the curt remark: "Fortifications are intended to answer fortifications. One menace must be met by another menace."

Earlier in the day the British government had communicated with the State Department here, proposing an extension of article 19 of the 1922 Washington naval treaty, which pledged Great Britain, the United United States and Japan to preserve the status quo in the matter of fortifications and naval bases in the Pacific. The treaty, renounced by Japan nearly two years ago, expires December 31 of this year.

The State Department, acknowledging the receipt of the communication, stated the matter was "under consideration."

Japan Also Notified.

The British office sent a similar proposal to Japan. Observers have speculated for some time over the intentions of the Japanese in regard to the article, since their abandonment of their treaty pledges in general.

The exact status of the observance of the pledge is considered uncertain, since Japan for some time quietly has been "civilizing" islands under their control in the Pacific, constructing wide concrete roads and large storage buildings on almost uninhabited islands, and generally improving harbors and waterfronts. Technically this is not considered "fortification," informed quarters hold.

The statement by Secretary Swanson yesterday was considered to be an indirect warning to Japan that any attempt to fortify the North Pacific islands she controls, or to strengthen her bases on the Gulf of Tartary, would be met directly by increased American efforts to build up Pacific bases controlled by this Government.

May Be Renewed.

If the three nations can agree broadly, there is a strong possibility that the treaty's pledge will be renewed, it was indicated yesterday.

"We'll have to wait and see what happens," said the Naval Secretary.

An Associated Press dispatch from Tokyo yesterday said Japanese naval sources there unofficially indicated an inclination to accede to British desires for maintenance of the status quo in the Pacific, with "certain revisions," which would take cognizance of what the Japanese termed "the greatly changed international situation."

The Campaign Arena

Providence, R. I., Oct. 7.—A harmonious Republican State convention today renominated United States Senator Jesse H. Metcalf by acclamation, and launched the Rhode Island campaign on a platform pledging "good government within the Constitution."

No opposition cropped up to interfere with the plans of party leaders to name former Assistant United States Attorney General Charles P. Sisson as candidate for Governor.

Binghamton, N. Y., Oct. 7 (AP).—Charles W. Kress, of Binghamton, has gone to court to prove that he is not "Charley" Kress as one avenue of escape from a Communist nomination with which he has been unwillingly saddled by a single voter.

Kress has obtained a court order from Supreme Court Justice Ely W. Personius directing the secretary of State to show Friday why the nomination should not be canceled.

At the recent primary election Kress was defeated by Representative Bert Lord, incumbent, for the Republican nomination for Congress, but a Communist voter wrote the name "Charley Kress" on a Communist ballot. The vote gave Kress the nomination.

Terre Haute, Ind., Oct. 7 (AP).—Attorneys for Earl Browder, Communist candidate for President, filed suit today for $50,000 damages against Mayor Samuel Beecher and Chief of Police James C. Yates, based on Browder's recent arrest when he came here to address a campaign rally.

In one complaint $25,000 is asked for loss of time and in another the same amount is sought for alleged false arrest and malicious prosecution.

Browder said recently in New York he planned to return here October 19 for another campaign meeting, but Mayor Beecher asserted the Communist candidate would be jailed again.

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Oct. 7 (AP).—United States Senator Tom Connally (Democrat), Texas, criticizing Col. Frank Knox, Republican Vice Presidential nominee, told insurance men today their companies and the Nation's banks and general financial structure are in a "promising and favorable condition."

Addressing the International Association of Casualty and Surety Underwriters and the National Association of Casualty and Surety Agents, he said:

"In the face of such overwhelming evidence of the soundness of insurance companies and banks, it is amazing to know Col. Frank B. Knox should publicly make a bitter assault upon the soundness of life insurance policies and savings bank deposits."

Cincinnati, Oct. 7 (AP).—The National Union for Social Justice reversed itself today and threw its support again behind Joseph A. Dixon, Democratic nominee for Congress from the First Ohio District. It had issued a statement Saturday saying it had withdrawn support from Dixon because of his refusal to alter his pledge of loyalty to President Roosevelt.

L. C. Rittmeyer, deputy State supervisor of the N. U. S. J., said the shift in position was authorized by the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, head of the National Union.

New York, Oct. 7 (AP).—Representative Joseph W. Martin, jr., manager of the Republican campaign in the East, tonight described as "ridiculous" charges made by Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes that there is a "community of interest" between Father Charles E. Coughlin and leaders of the Republican Party.

"That is utterly ridiculous and absurd," Martin said. "The only possible similarity or connection between us is that we are both against Roosevelt."

Martinelli to Give Concert Tomorrow

Giovanni Martinelli, Metropolitan Opera tenor, begins his American season with a recital tomorrow evening in Constitution Hall, under the management of Beren-Brook Artists. He will be assisted by the young American violinist, Inez Lauritano, a pupil of Auer and Louis Persinger. Immediately after this recital, Martinelli goes to Havana, and from there to California, where he will open the San Francisco Opera season with Elizabeth Rethberg in "La Juive."

Martinelli will sing arias from "L'Africana," "Tosca" and "Aida," and the following lyrics: "L'Absence" (Berlioz), "Nuit d'Etoiles" (Debussy), "Berceuse Amoureuse" (Roxas), "Vaghissima Sembianza" (Donaudy), "Staendchen" (Schubert), "A Summer Night" (Thomas) and "Lift Thine Eyes" (Logan). He will be accompanied by Emilio Roxas.

Miss Lauritano, with Celius Dougherty at the piano, will play Glazunov's A minor concerto, and pieces by Bloch, De Falla and Ries.

Detective Chief Lauds His Aids In Bomb Case

Grand Jury Will Consider Evidence Against Two Suspects Nov. 9.

One of the most sensational pieces of detective work in the history of the Postoffice Department will be brought to light by postal inspectors when the case against Dr. H. R. Hege and Ed Banner is taken before a grand jury November 9. The two are held for their alleged part in the bomb slaying of Curry Thomas, at Cape Charles, Va., according to K. P. Aldrich, chief inspector here.

Unwilling to disclose any particulars of the Government's case against the two accused men, Aldrich nevertheless said yesterday that it was "one of the cleverest bits of work I have ever known."

Dr. Hege, a dentist living at Mount Airy, N. C., was arrested with Banner as the two men drove across the State line into Virginia Tuesday night. Hege and Banner were hurried to Eastville, Va. and jailed. There Hege's wrist was severely cut by a broken crystal from his watch. He said the slashing was accidental. He will recover.

Bride to Be Witness.

The July 22 bomb which killed Thomas, a prosperous farmer of a well-known family, also injured his bride of six weeks, who had been employed by Dr. Hege in his dental office for three years before she met and married Thomas this year. The bride is still in a hospital at Nassawaddox, but is expected to be able to leave in time to serve as a witness before the grand jury.

An example of the way in which the postal inspectors worked was shown in the way they seized the two men. They waited until the suspects crossed the Virginia line in Carroll County while motoring northward from Mount Airy. Banner, a WPA foreman, roomed at the dentists' house. Police waited to make the arrest until the men were within the State where Thomas was killed, thereby eliminating extradition difficulties.

The farmer was killed by a bomb sent through the mails. He and his bride thought the package containing the device was a wedding present.

The newlyweds received the parcel at the Cape Charles postoffice and drove home before opening it. They sat in their automobile beside the house and commenced to unwrap it. As the paper was unfolded an explosion occurred, blowing the farmer to bits, wrecking the car, and throwing Mrs. Thomas out of the car seriously injured.

It is known that postal inspectors started their investigation from the fragments of bomb, and that these small pieces of metal were traced to the manufacturer by experts in metallurgy.

Questioned in July.

Inspectors had questioned Dr. Hege in July, but he said he knew of no one who would wish to harm her. Aldrich yesterday said here that Mrs. Thomas did not know of anyone to suspect. At first they had only the fragments of iron for clews. The paper in which the bomb was wrapped, often useful as a clew, was reported to have been blown into minute pieces.

For approximately 11 weeks Inspectors R. B. Webb and J. E. Sentman, of the Richmond district, and George T. Blakely, of the Washington headquarters, have been quietly investigating the case. So well under cover was their investigation that many thought the case had been dropped and forgotten, according to Aldrich.

Aldrich has turned all evidence over to Northampton County Prosecutor Charles Lankford, and will permit him to prosecute the case on the murder charge rather than on the lesser crime of sending a bomb through the mails, which carries a $10,000 fine and 20-year imprisonment penalty.

Saves Evidence for Trial.

The prosecutor declined to discuss evidence, as did authorities here. "We are saving everything for the trial," said Aldrich. "We are sure of our evidence and think we have a closed case."

Lankford would not state what the motive for the killing was, but at the Washington headquarters "jealousy" was mentioned by an inspector. Lankford yesterday said he had decided against requesting a special grand jury to consider the case.

"That two men are involved makes this case very unusual," Aldrich said. "Usually a man who is contemplating a crime of this nature takes no one into his confidence."

Thomas M. Milligan, chief inspector for Virginia and the District of Columbia, explained that one of the clews was the sound of a "click" such as the springing of a mousetrap. That sound, heard by Mrs. Thomas just before the explosion, will play an important part in the evidence.

Black Legion Link Sought in Toledo

Toledo, Ohio, Oct. 7 (AP).—Possibility that city council may investigate alleged connections of city employes with the Black Legion arose tonight as John A. Moritz, chief investigator for the Michigan attorney general's office, joined in the local prosecutor's investigation of an organization known as the Legion of America.

The Michigan investigator said he wanted to determine whether the Legion of America, in which a police sergeant has admitted membership, has any connection with the Black Legion.

John Q. Carey, vice mayor, said he would introduce legislation in the city council next Monday authorizing an inquiry by the council to determine whether city employes had any part in the activities of the Black Legion.

The La Follette Senate committee has three investigators here checking up on recent bombings of Communist meetings.

Death Decreed In Bomb Killing Of Mine Leader

Fugmann Is Found Guilty in Pennsylvania; Jury Out 29 Hours.

By the Associated Press.

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Oct. 7.—A jury of 12 men decreed the death penalty late today for Michael Fugmann, former German artilleryman, in convicting him of the "Easter gift" bomb slaying of Thomas Maloney, sr., former president of a disbanded miners union.

Defense Attorney Edward F. McGovern said he would ask for a new trial.

Another killed Michael Gallagher, an elderly cemetery sexton. Others sent through the mails failed to explode, or were left unopened by suspicious recipients. All the bombs were mailed last Good Friday.

The jury reported after more than 29 hours' deliberation.

Fugmann, arrested after several weeks of investigatioin into mailing of the cigar-box bombs, denied all connection with the crimes and said he "welcomed" trial to prove his innocence.

The prosecution called Arthur Koehler, United States Government wood expert who figured in the Hauptmann trial. Koehler testified wood in the bombs matched material in Fugmann's home.

Maloney, his son, and Maloney's daughter, Margaret, were in the kitchen when the parcel post bomb was delivered April 10. Mrs. Maloney was on the second floor, ill.

Maloney unwrapped the package and forced the lid open.

There was an explosion. The kitchen was wrecked. Maloney staggered and fell, maimed, to the kitchen floor. Young Thomas lay bleeding in another part of the room.

Locksmith Offers Fiance Death Clue

Covington, Ky., Oct. 7 (AP).—Missing keys to the home of the Brady sisters took on added significance tonight as police intensified their search for the slayer of Miss Frances Marie Brady, 37.

They received a report an unidentified man employed a Cincinnati locksmith to make a key similar to those possessed by Miss Brady's sisters, Ella Celine and Margaret.

Since Miss Brady was shot and killed about 1 a. m. Friday as she stepped into the house, police had sought two keys the sisters said had been missing for many months.

Almost at the hour Frances had planned to be married, a coroner's jury heard today the story of her slaying and recommended continuation of an intensive police investigation to "determine the motive of the crime and to bring the murderer to justice."

The jury heard the sisters of the slain woman and her fiancee discount jealousy as a motive.

Virginia Chairmen Named by Farley

New York, Oct. 7 (AP).—James A. Farley, Democratic national chairman, today received from Robert W. Daniel, State senator from Virginia, finance director of the national committee and Virginia chairman of the national council of Roosevelt electors, final recommendations to posts of local chairmen for the electors group.

Farley immediately appointed those suggested. There were 43 in the group, bringing the number of local Virginia chairmen of electors to over 200.

In supervising activities of the Virginia division, Daniel is being assisted by Robert Sikes, divisional director from the Democratic national committee headquarters in New York. The Roosevelt electors are raising the Democratic campaign fund and have set a goal of $2,000,000.

Sister's Health Causes Woman To Try Suicide

D. C. Clerk Slashes Throat in Apartment; Is in Grave Condition.

"I can't go any further—"

Those five words, the only ones legible on a blood-stained note found beside Mary Oliver Dean, 44, on the floor of her bathroom, told a story of heartbreak and worry for a sister, Alice, who had lived with her for 20 years and who is now confined in Johns Hopkins Hospital.

Mary Dean, a War Department clerk, was still alive last night, with a bare chance of living, in Casualty Hospital, her throat slashed by a razor blade.

Police said she was despondent because her sister and closest companion, Alice, suffered a nervous breakdown six weeks ago and may need hospital treatment for several more weeks.

It was only through the concern of Miss Nadine Leach, Mary Dean's superior at the War Department, that Miss Dean was found alive. Miss Leach, a confidante of Miss Dean, became worried when her clerk failed to appear yesterday morning.

Knowing Miss Dean's worried state, she went to the Dean apartment at 900 Nineteenth street northwest. There was no answer when she knocked at the door. Mrs. Emma Pittis, manager of the apartment house, noticed the trash basket was still in the hallway, and deduced that Miss Dean had been home the night before and was still in the apartment.

A porter pried off the doorknob, unlocked the chain inside and found Miss Dean in a pool of blood and water on the bathroom floor. She had left the washbasin tap running. Arteries in her throat were severed.

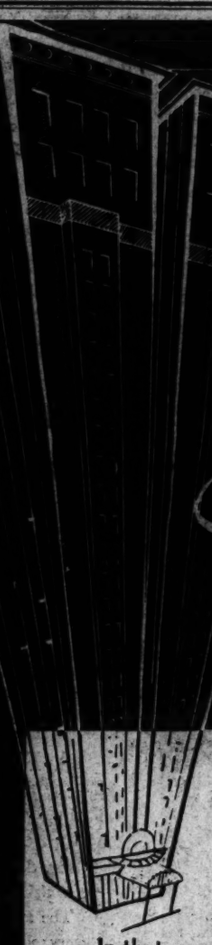
WITH WASHINGTON—
We Progress!



IN 1872 Washington was breathing the air of an expansive Union. The jarring notes of post-war cacophony were lingering less, national economic life was throbbing faster and the Capital was pulsating in the reflection of a more United States. In that year The Hamilton Hotel was born, at Fourteenth and K Streets.

Known then as the Hamilton House it became, soon, a vital component in the domestic and transient affairs of the city. Old-fashioned atmosphere lingered in a colonial setting lit bright by oil lamps. Commerce sped up . . . and as business grew, so did the Hamilton.

The Hamilton can look back over 64 proud years of progress. We have kept pace with Washington. Progression has been our existence. Today in 1936 we stand on the same spot—where in 1872 stood a small unpretentious building, there now is a new and thoroughly modernized hostelry erected by us in 1921.

Today we glory in our 11 stories of success . . . our Rainbow Room, the last word in modern design for dancing and entertainment . . . our Dining Room, the center of attraction for good food and wise diners . . . our Coffee Shop, the delightful haven of selectful epicureans.

We do not rest on our laurels, though . . . we stride upward . . . ever upward, maintaining the pace that 20th century Washington demands—and always finds at The Hamilton.

Red Cross Roll Totals 30,208 As Drive Grows

Campaign at 47 Per Cent of Goal; 3,067 Added in Day.

Enrollment in the Red Cross roll call drive reached 30,208 yesterday as 3,067 names were added to the rapidly growing list of new members.

Presiding at a meeting of the workers yesterday noon, Lloyd B. Wilson, president of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. and general manager of the drive, said that, with yesterday's totals, approximately 47 per cent of the goal set at the beginning of the campaign had been achieved.

Federal Units Head.

The biggest report yesterday came from Gen. Boschen, chief of Army Finance and chairman of the Government unit. He said reports from 29 Government agencies showed an enrollment percentage of 46 per cent in the divisions reporting. The percentage of all Government workers joining must be 34 per cent of the 119,000 employes in Washington in order for the committee to make its quota.

At noon yesterday seven departments—Commerce, General Accounting, Government Printing, Treasury, Veterans' Administration and the District Government—employing 60,650 persons, had made partial returns totaling 8,945 memberships. He added that this probably was only a small percentage of the enrollment.

An increase of 2,412 yesterday brought the total of the Government's memberships up to 23,447.

Reporting for Robert V. Fleming, chairman of the financial committee, I. Roberts yesterday said his group expected to complete its work within a few days. A total of 1,813 has been turned in to date by this group.

Headed by B. A. Skinner, the Utilities Committee reported a total enrollment of 1,317. This represents returns from only eight of the 27 utilities.

U. S. to Evict Impoverished Sisters

On the opposite wall hung a portrait of Grandmother Gideon, wearing a red velvet frock, a lace collar and with her hair parted severely down the middle. Leaning against the fireplace was Grandfather Gidean's estoc—a sword cane such as many a gentleman carried back in the Gorgeous Hussy's day.

The atmosphere of the room was that of another age, and the Misses Colt seemed a part of it. It sounded strange even to hear them talking about renting rooms. They were reared at a time when it was thought more important to know how to curtsy than to cook. Their tutors and their governess instructed them in French as well as English. And if they were taught more about judging fine lace than practical real estate problems, then so were the other young girls of their day.

Miss Kate's chief concern has always been orphans. Like her mother and her grandmother, she is a member of the board of directors of the Washington Orphan Asylum. And both she and Miss Alice have been active parishioners of fashionable St. John's Church.

Both Tried to Work.

When their modest fortune was wiped out, both tried to do something. Miss Alice became a tutor in French, but her first pupil, a young boy, was more concerned about football and baseball than languages, and that endeavor failed. Miss Kate wrote some sketches, but there seemed to be no market for them.

Now, at 68, Miss Kate announces proudly that she is learning to cook.

Neither of the sisters indulges in self-pity. If either allows a melancholy note to creep into her voice, the other administers a reprimand. Both, however, continue to wonder what happened to their plans for a rooming house.

Miss Kate, rummaging in an old box, pulled out a letter from the Home Owners Loan Corporation. It said:

"We want you to know that this corporation is at all times making every effort to assist its borrowers in keeping possession of their homes * * * *"

Remembering that letter, the Misses Cole were sure in 1934 that the HOLC would make the loan for repairs and thus pave the way for roomers.

"We had five persons who wanted to come with us," said Miss Kate. "Four offered to pay $15 a month, and one $25 a month.

"But we couldn't have desirable roomers in without making repairs. When the HOLC first asked us if we wanted to borrow money for repairs, we applied for a loan of $1,500. Weeks passed—months. We had visitors from the HOLC in a steady stream, and they were all very nice gentlemen. One of them did ask if he could keep his hat on in the house because it was so cold, but he was nice, too.

"The credit men came, and the appraisers, and the architect and the contractors. Some of them did the same thing, as though they were checking on each other. Three sets of plans were made. We never had so many visitors in our lives.

"They decided that $1,500 wouldn't be enough. They said we ought to get $3,000, and then we could have the house painted and do a lot of other things.

"But nothing seemed to happen. Once we were told to go to Rockville and sign notes for the repairs. When we goth there the notes hadn't arrived from the main office in Baltimore.

"Finally we were told that we wouldn't get the loan. That was last year. One of the HOLC men said our situation was hopeless, and he told us we had better take $2,000 and let the house go. I don't know who would give us the $2,000. That part of it is very mysterious. But we do know that there are certain people who have wanted the house for a long time."

Miss Alice interrupted to show the caller a card on which she had done some illuminated lettering. She wondered if she might sell her work, and then, without waiting for an answer, she concluded that she couldn't.

"Oh, Alice, don't be forlorn," said Miss Kate.

Old Articles Sold.

Miss Kate told about the old books and other articles she has sold thus far, and mentioned some of the things that might yet bring in money. There was the lock of Abraham Lincoln's hair, for example. It is supposed to have been cut from Lincoln's head the night he died across from Ford's Theater. It was left to the sisters by their father, William D. Colt, who came here in 1862 to work for Jay Cooke, a financial wizard in his day.

Mrs. Susie Colt, their mother, died in the Kirke street house in the fall of 1934. She was 89 years old.

The sisters won't like to leave Kirke street next month when the trees bein to get bare in Chevy Chase. Thirty years in one house is a long time. Charles West, who likes his "quality folk," won't like to leave, either.

Maryland Row May Tie Up Pay Of State Police

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Oct. 7.—An implied threat by Employment Commissioner Harry C. Jones to hold up the next State police pay roll resulted today from a refusal by Maj. Enoch B. Garey, State police superintendent, to rescind an order demoting two of four suspended troopers.

Garey informed Jones he "cannot accede" to an order issued yesterday to restore A. W. Markley and J. E. Wheeler, formerly sergeant and corporal, respectively, to their former rank. They had been reduced to the grade of officer, then suspended on charges of violating merit-system rules in accepting gratuities.

They, together with the other officers, face a hearing before Jones, who will determine final disposition of the case. Jones, in a letter to Garey yesterday held the demotions were prejudicial to the best interests of the troopers.

Maj. Garey asserted in reply he had acted under authority given him by law to "demote in rank any employe of the department below the rank of detective sergeant for such cause as may seem fit to him."

In receipt of the police superintendent's answer, Jones issued the following statement:

"I have no comment to make, except that the superintendent of police is in receipt of a lawful order from this department, and if he fails to comply with same, the matter will be adequately handled when the next pay roll of his department comes to me for approval."

Jones' original order requested Maj. Garey to restore Markley and Wheeler to their non-commissioned ranks on department rolls. While under suspension, the men do not draw pay. However, Jones pointed out, should he rule in favor of the troopers after the hearing, an order would "undoubtedly" be issued restoring to them their rank and back pay.

After the suspensions, Corp. W. R. May was promoted to the rank of sergeant and succeeded Markley in command of the substation at Laurel.

Eckener Backs Site Near D. C. For Zeppelin

Baltimore and Morristown Still Are Considered, Designer Says.

Hybla Valley, 12 miles south of Washington on the Richmond highway, yesterday received the stamp of Dr. Hugo Eckener's approval as the site of the American terminus for transatlantic airship traffic.

Just before boarding a New York-bound plane, the famous German designer and builder of the Graf Zeppelin and Hindenburg announced he is strongly impressed by Hybla Valley's possibilities, although Baltimore and Morristown, N. J., are still under consideration.

Conferring earlier in the day with Secretary of Commerce Roper and Assistant Secretary Johnson, Dr. Eckener described the nearby Virginia landing field as "an ideal site."

Its selection would make Washington a cosmopolitan aerial crossroads, the North American capital of international dirigible traffic linking three continents—the Americas and Europe.

The New Jersey site would be the most advantageous from the standpoint of traffic convenience, due to its proximity to Newark Airport and New York, but Baltimore and Washington (Hybla Valley) are to be favored for their meteorological superiority, the German airship master declared at a Willard Hotel press conference.

"And with me it's 'safety first,'" he added, interpreted as an indication that the Morristown alternative will be the first to be eliminated unless satisfactory backing is not obtainable for either Baltimore or Hybla Valley.

For Dr. Eckener and his traveling aid and interpreter, Frederick William von Meister, made it clear that the German Zeppelin Co. is lokoing to outside interests to build the necessary hangar and mooring mast. The airship line would merely lease the accommodations, just as steamships and air transportation companies lease terminal facilities.

"While the German flights to this country are still classified as experimental," Roper said, "Dr. Eckener discussed the advisability of early, regular schedules which would necessitate the construction of ports. He suggested Hybla Valley, near Alexandria, Va., as an ideal site.

"Development of the service is being considered tentatively on the same basis as surface shipping is promoted, which provides for Government aid in construction and operation, but operated as private enterprises with private capital commercially invested.

"The recently created Maritime Authority and the Bureau of Air Commerce would have respective duties in the development, promotion and regulation of the service with respective countries granting reciprocal concessions in the way of landing facilities and lighter-than-air ship ports."

Secretary Roper and Col. Johnson emphasized that Congressional enactment will be required to make this country a party to the ambitious civil airship program visualized by Dr. Eckener. Col. Johnson said he is "sanguine" over the prospects of appropriate legislation being introduced at the coming session.

Dr. Eckner, who sails for home tomorrow night on the Hindenburg's last Lakehurst-to-Frankfort crossing this year, reminded that a sister ship to the Hindenburg is now under construction, and will be completed next summer. If a suitable landing field and hangar is provided in the meantime—the Navy station at Lakehurst, N. J., has been used by the Hindenburg only by the good graces of that department—the German aeronautical pilot and engineer predicted weekly sailings from either side of the Atlantic.

Dr. Eckener laughingly referred to the incident of several years ago when an enraged bull chased him off the Hybla Valley landing field to put an abrupt end to his inspection tour. He added that the escapade has not prejudiced him against the Virginia site.

Hindenburg Lands Again

Naval Air Station, Lakehurst, N. J., Oct. 7 (U.P.).—The German dirigible Hindenburg landed here from Germany at 9:09 o'clock tonight. It was the first night landing of the giant dirigible. The flight which ended tonight is the first leg of the ship's tenth and last round-trip flight between the United States and Germany this season. Regular flights will be resumed next year.

Zoning Board To Study Alley Changes Today

Five Applications to Be Considered in Wind-up of 2-Day Session.

Five applications for changes in alley property, the first to be scheduled for public hearing since the change in regulations last summer, will be considered by the District Zoning Commission today as the conclusion of a two-day session.

Twenty-five applications for zoning changes of property fronting on streets were heard yesterday at an all-day hearing.

Two communities organized protests against proposals to build apartments in residential areas. One application involved property on the west side of Colorado avenue, between Longfellow and Madison streets northwest, while the other concerned land on Aspen, Whittier and Third streets northwest.

Another fight developed on the renewed attempt to rezone the Mary E Patten property at 2122 Massachusetts avenue northwest so that an apartment house might be built.

Rear Admiral Mark L. Bristol, retired, urged the commission to grant the application, rejected five times in past years, while Rear Admiral Joseph V. Strauss, retired, opposed the change. The former lives at 1621 Massachusetts avenue, and the latter at 2208 Massachusetts avnue.

H. G. Hoskinson, vice president of the Riggs National Bank, which has a branch in the vicinity, supported Miss Patten's application.

Joseph A. Rafferty appeared for Lars Anderson, who has an $80,000 residence nearby, and vigorously fought the rezoning plan.

"The mercenary advantage of the owners of one parcel of property should not be permitted to change the character of an entire neighborhood," he said.

Forum Will Discuss New Deal Policies

A symposium on "Social Security and the New Deal" will be held by the Capital City Forum at its headquarters, 1502 Fourteenth street northwest, tomorrow evening at 8:15 o'clock.

Leaders in the discussion, which marks resumption of the organization's meeting, will be Dr. Walter J. Campbell, director of the Education Division of the Social Security Board; Ray Cooke, secretary of the Workers' Alliance of America, and Benjamin C. Marsh, director of the People's Lobby.

University President Arrives As New Spanish Ambassador

Prof. Fernando De Los Rios, Head of Madrid Institution, Reaches Capital With Family to Succeed Luis Calderon, Who Resigned.

The faithful few from the Spanish Embassy met the train that bore their newly appointed chief to Washington last night.

He is Prof. Fernando de los Rios, president of the University of Madrid and Spain's emissary to the United States to succeed Luis Calderon. The latter resigned September 5, stating he felt "unable to co-operate with certain tendencies within the new Spanish government."

The new ambassador, who wore tortoise-shell glasses and has a grayish-black beard, was accompanied by his wife; his daughter, Senorita Laura de los Rios; his mother-in-law, Senora Laura Garcia, and his nephew, Francisco Giner de los Rios. All seemed to be suffering either from the strain of their long journey or from thought of the terror brought by rebel armies to their once-sunny Spain.

The 60-year-old diplomat is well known in the United States. His first visit was in 1919, when as technical adviser to the International Congress of Labor he visited the Capital. On the last occasion, in 1928, he lectured on Spanish culture at Columbia University.

Ambassador de los Rios has devoted many years to the service of his land. Before former King Alfonso fled the country in 1931 and the Bourbon dynasty collapsed he had been an active Republican sympathizer and was incarcerated for his views.

Later, under Republican administrations, he served for a time as Minister of Justice and Foreign Affairs, and at the outbreak of the present civil war he represented his country at Geneva. Several months ago he was advised by Madrid to proceed to Paris for diplomatic duties, and he was there September 19 when the Caballero government appointed him ambassador to this country.

When Ambassador de los Rios arrived at New York Tuesday on the French liner Ile de France he firmly said that "I represent no party now, for I am here as the Ambassador and representative of the legal Spanish government."

Husband's Charge Ousts Policeman

A police trial board yesterday recdismissal of Policeman Francis W. Gordy, of the Fourth Precinct, after he was found guilty Tuesday of conduct prejudicial to the reputation, good order and discipline of the force.

Gordy was arraigned on charges brought several weeks ago by John Brown, colored, of the 200 block Second street southwest. Brown said he returned to his home and found the policeman with Lillian Brown, his wife.

Brown is alleged to have struggled with the policeman and during the altercation three shots were fired at Gordy. The charge accused the policeman of having made no report of the fight and having taken no police action in the matter.

Officials said Gordy probably will appeal the case.

northwest, pleaded not guilty and asked a jury trial. Bond was set at $1,000.

The case then came before Judge John P. McMahon, and attorneys for Glaze—who, police said, had given his name as Cash—obtained a five-day continuance. Next the case was called November 16, and continued until December 7, when it was continued until December 9. Later the hearing was set for December 28, and on this date the case was called by Judge Walter J. Casey, who took the matter under advisement and allowed Glaze's lawyers ten days in which to file briefs.

September 1, 1936, the case was called before Judge Isaac Hitt, and again it was sent to the clerk's office for reassignment, this time, however, with a notation calling for its return within two weeks.

Finally Glaze's trial was begun before Judge Curran Tuesday and it went to the jury yesterday after completion of arguments by Assistant United States Attorney Louis Whitestone.

Since 1926, according to police records, Glaze has been arrested 33 times, 19 times under his own name and 14 times under the alias of "Aaron Cash." He once was sentenced to jail for 30 days on a reckless driving charge. At the time Mrs. Hausenfluck was killed, police said, Glaze was driving on a revoked permit.

Aid Sent by Coast Guard; Yacht, Adrift, Hunted in Mid-Pacific.

By the Associated Press.

Seattle, Oct. 7.—The little Coast Guard patrol boat Morris plowed through the North Pacific tonight on a more than 800-mile voyage from Ketchikan to investigate a reported mutiny aboard the freighter Tanana, at Dry Spruce Bay, Alaska.

Dry Spruce Bay is in Kupreanof Strait, Kodiak Island.

Appeals to Commission.

At San Francisco, Thomas G. Plant, chairman of the Coast Shipowners Committee, negotiating a working agreement with maritime unions, appealed to the President's Maritime Commission in Washington, D. C., for "assistance in straightening out this critical situation."

M. J. McKinstry, assistant to the vice president of the Alaska Line, said Capt. H. Ryning, of the Tanana, wirelessed that firemen declared a strike, demanding longshore pay for handling cargo. He said that, as usual, the crew had been handling cargo in isolated ports where there are no longshoremen.

Steam Is Shut Off.

Plant's telegram to the Maritime Commission stated the Tanana's engine room crew shut off steam to deck winches and refused to comply with the master's orders. He said the strikers demanded "certain union men be employed, none of which were available at this anchorage. The anchorage is open and exposed, and the ship is in dangerous situation. Efforts with the firemen's union in Seattle to straighten out the situation have been unavailing so far."

Plant said "the master of the vessel has called upon the Coast Guard to assist him in quelling this mutiny aboard vessel."

Cutter Hunts Ship Adrift in Pacific.

Honolulu, Oct. 7 (AP).—A yacht in distress was hunted in mid-Pacific tonight, while overcast skies and watery distances combined to thwart efforts of a rescue ship.

The troubled vessel was the auxiliary ketch Margaret Payne, with presumably six persons aboard. She was drifting westward somewhere about 500 miles south of here, but could not give her position because cloudy skies precluded sun and star observations. Her wireless was woefully weak.

Strangely out of sight, she was not out of hearing.

Circling in the general area, the Coast Guard cutter Itasca determinedly sought the yacht.

The Margaret Payne said she had drifted about 100 miles westward since Monday. Aht that time she was about half way between Honolulu and Fanning Island, which is about 800 miles south of here.

The Army raido kept up communication with her for about an hour ending at midnight.

Details of the yacht's troubles were meager, except that she obviously was adrift. She told Army listeners her passengers had only rainwater to drink. Nothing was said about food supplies.

Information here indicated those aboard were the listed owners, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Payne; Elton Freeman, captain, and Gordon Maitland, Karl Berger and Hal Gould, passengers. Their nationalities were not ascertained.

Crew Fires Blankets, Attract Rescue Ship

New York, Oct. 7 (AP).—Kerosene-soaked blankets flaring from the masts of a sinking schooner brought last-minute rescue to its captain and crew and enabled the American Merchant line American to bring them into port today.

Capt. Alen Rodney, rescued with five sailors, said his coal-laden schooner Mabel A. Frye was wallowing helplessly in the driving seas after being battered for five days when the liner hove in sight off the Newfoundland coast Saturday night.

The 39-year-old captain, survivor of two ship disasters, said there were no flares aboard the 1,151-ton schooner, so he piled the bankets on the deck and fixed some to the masts, soaked them in kerosene and lighted them.

Capt. Alfred Moore, of the liner, saw the flares and came to the rescue of the schooner, which had lost its sails and its single lifeboat.

A lifeboat was launched. The schooner was drifting 12 knots an hour before the wind, but Chief Officer Theodore Christensen got the six men off the schooner in 54 minutes.

Wrists Cut, Electrician Hopes Wife Will Know He's Living

J. D. WILSON.

In a ward at Gallinger Hospital, weak from loss of blood after having slashed his wrists in front of the White House, Joseph D. Wilson voiced concern last night only for his wife to know he "was all right."

Wilson, a 37-year-old electrician from Atlanta, Ga., attempted to put a dramatic end to five years of unemployment yesterday. Only the presence of White House guards saved his life.

Standing in front of the executive wing, the 210-pound electrician pulled a penknife from his poeket and made deep incisions in each wrist. Then he walked to the door.

Guards stopped him, bound his wounds and took him to Emergency Hospital. Wilson would say only that he was "despondent" and wanted an appointment with Marvin McIntyre, secretary to the President.

Late last night police reported Earl L. Strickland, 22, of the 5200 block Illinois avenue northwest, slashed his body with a razor in a suicide attempt. He was taken to Walter Reed Hospital, where physicians said his condition was not serious.

After treatment at Emergency Hospital, Wilson was taken to Gallinger for observation. He refused to comment further on motives for his suicide attempt.

From Atlanta, the Associated Press reported that Wilson's wife, Mrs. Ruth Wilson, knew of no reason why her husband should try to kill himself. He had left home Tuesday morning, she said, with the intention of going to Washington to look for employment. The Wilsons have two daughters, 11 and 14 year old.

D. C. Cabman Held In Marlboro Death

A coroner's jury in Marlboro, Md., last night held Robert A. Jenkins, 25-year-old Washington cab driver, of the 500 block M street southwest, on a charge of manslaughter in connection with the death of Roy Perry, 23, of Upper Marlboro, after an accident on Marlboro Pike early Sunday.

Perry died in Casualty Hospital Monday. It was brought out in the testimony at the inquest that he had been struck by Jenkins' car while walking along the road. Jenkins picked him up and, while on the way to a hospital, crashed into a telephone pole.

Culbertson on Bridge

"Dear Mr. Culbertson:

"There is nothing remarkable about the hand I am inclosing, but it was the cause of a mild argument between my wife and myself. I can truthfully say 'mild' because, as you will see, no great castastrophe resulted from the four spade contract we reached. Nine tricks were cold and the tenth simply could not be made, so the one trick penalty was cheerfully conceded. The point of the matter is that my wife, who was South, thought I overbid in jumping her opening spade bid to three. Did I? Very truly yours.

"A. N. N."

South, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 spade	Pass	3 spades	Pass
4 spades	Pass	Pass	Pass

It would be difficult to find a hand that could more exactly illustrate the pragmatic side of bidding. The Culbertson system of raises includes this rule: "Raise partner's suit bid to three with at least four trumps, to the jack or better, a doubleton, and at least two and one-half honor tricks in the hand." But, as I say in my Gold Book, the responding hand must remember that the double raise is forcing to game, and should find some other response with a weak looking hand, particularly when there is no more than one honor trick outside of the trump suit.

Nevertheless, despite the evident agreement of Mr. and Mrs. A. N. N. that four spades "simply could not be made," we find that it should have been made by correct non-double-dummy play!

From the postscript of the letter we learned that West opened the diamond jack. East, of course, took the king and ace and then undoubtedly shifted to a club. Declarer should have drawn two rounds of trumps, cashed the other two club tricks, and then attacked the heart suit properly. With the heart situation in dummy, and his own hand what it was, only one line of play had a reasonable chance of holding the loss to one heart trick. That was to play a small heart to the ace and return one from the dummy on the hope that either defender had started with a doubleton honor. This was by no means a remote chance, but, anyway, it was the only chance! As it happened East held a doubleton queen and would be forced to win the second heart lead. (It could do West no good to overtake, nor would it matter if East should unblock the queen on the ace. His ten still would be a blocking card.) East could not exit without giving declarer a ruff and a discard, and thereby his tenth trick.

French Expect Tourist Boom On Devaluation

Cheaper Money May Bring Americans Back, Restore Many Industries

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Oct. 7.—Four million Frenchmen directly interested in France's "invisible exports"—the tourist business—are greeting devaluation of the franc with unmuffled cheers.

To them, it means "the Yanks are coming—back again!" with all the thrilling implications of the American Doughboy's marching song through the streets of Paris in 1917.

Sadly depleted coffers—not depleted man power—will be the rescue theme this time.

Hotel-keepers and their tip-starved employes, railroad porters and presidents, shop keepers, souvenir manufacturers, postcard peddlers, guides and various others who serve the tourist traffic—all look for a boom year in 1937.

Subject of Study.

Failure of Americans to come to France in recent years as they did in 1927, 1928 and 1929 has been the subject of exhaustive studies conducted by magazines, newspapers and parliamentary committees. All agreed Americans stayed away because the French franc cost too much in terms of the United States dollar.

"We can cut railroad fares and hotel rates," grumbled one hotel keeper. "We can hold fetes and fairs by the dozen. We can advertise abroad and build the fastest liner on the Atlantic.

"We can do everything we can think of but the Americans won't flock to France as long as the dollar is worth only 15 francs."

Devaluation, as they now see it, is the panacea for all of France's financial doldrums.

It remains to be seen what will happen. Possible future effects have been described by press and officials alike, thus:

"With devaluation, the franc, which was formerly 15 to the dollar, now becomes about 20 to the dollar. Therefore, more francs are needed to buy foreign goods.

Will Helps Exports.

"Imports will cost more. But France's export trade will be immeasurably helped by the lowering prices of French products abroad.

"And the tourists—now that they will get more francs for their own money—will flock back to France, bringing prosperity to millions."

French exports, down 67.4 per cent since 1926, are expected to boom, and experts predict France will begin a steady climb back to her former position as a merchant nation.

Serious potential stumbling-blocks lie ahead, however. To guard against them, the government took precautions to protect its monetary reform by stringent measures against increases in prices and strikes for higher pay.

The Black Automatic

By WILLIAM BYRON MOWERY

CHAPTER III.

A ripple of applause passed around the room. Noel sat cold and silent. With a gracious nod to his audience for their approval Ostrand went on:

"Your story about this midnight phone call, midnight visitor and midnight killers is too flimsy for a man of my experience to believe." Dramatically he pointed an accusing finger. "Noel Irving, you are concealing something about this murder!"

The applause broke out again. Herm Spencer went redfaced with anger at the spectacle of the smug, wealthy Ostrand baiting the penniless and disgraced former officer, but Noel himself did not move or change expression.

"Very well. Since you choose to be recalcitrant, let me warn you that I intend to push this case and arrest those men, and if I discover that you did obstruct justice here, then you're going to suffer the full penalty of the law."

Noel smiled in derision at Ostrand's vow to take that shadowy outfit. On this case Ostrand and the city police and the regular Mounted were hopelessly beyond their depth. That outfit was no city gang, fitting into some ordinary pigeonhole, but a pack of outlanders, strange and unguessable. Whoever picked up their trail would be good, and whoever ran that trail would likely wind up dead, like Jimmy.

The jury filed out, to deliberate their verdict privately. The tense quiet of the room broke, the hum of low voices arose, and Noel went back to that battle within himself.

In vision he saw Jimmy coming across the room to him last evening; felt his strong handclasp and the warmth of his smile; heard the young adventurer calling him "partner." Jimmy had been his guest, killed in his home, and by a law as ancient as the human home itself it was his solemn duty to see that Jimmy was avenged.

He reflected, too, that somewhere in the Dominion there was a pack of men brazen enough, confident enough, disdainful enough of the Mounted, that they had slain a man in the very abode of one who had led the Mounted Intelligence for years. They had flung a challenge at the might and the majesty of the law. That challenge must not go unanswered. Somebody had to take up that gauge.

In a few minutes the jury shuffled back in with their verdict, and the foreman read it. Of those tedious whereas's and aforesaid's, only six words lingered with Noel—"at the hands of parties unknown." How true those words, he thought. And forever those parties would remain unknown. Like wraiths those men had faded into the mist last night, with a wanton laugh. Today, somewhere, they were alive, in the sunshine; and Jimmy, in that gray old building down the street——

Noel scarcely heard him. In the moments just past he had lost the battle which had been raging within him since last midnight. In bitterness of heart he had sworn that he would never again lay hand to police work or go back into that shadow world where he had wasted 13 years of his life. But now he had to go back. Inexorably he was driven by conscience and duty and personal vengeance to go after those unknowns. The good sword which he had spent 13 years in forging and polishing and which he had vowed never to use again—well, he must use it once more, for Jimmy's sake.

Spencer took him by the arm. "Come home with me, Noel. You need a rest. You're done out."

Noel shook his head, slowly. "Thanks, Herm. Before I rest there's a little matter to be attended to."

With a nod of "so long," he turned abruptly and shouldered his way up the crowded aisle for the door.

Three nights later, carrying a duffelbag that contained a few clothes and personal belongings, Noel called around at Sergeant Spencer's home, near 1 o'clock.

He found Spencer hard at work at a table in the little living room. Tired and harassed, the sergeant was combing through a mass of fingerprint keys, rogue-gallery snaps and various paraphernalia from the mounted files. On a couch across the room Eleanor Spencer was lying asleep, a blanket over her, a magazine and a half-eaten apple on the blanket.

"Where the devil have you been these last three days?" Spencer greeted him. "I drove around to your place a dozen times, and rang your phone bell off."

"I've been busy, Herm. If you've got a cup of coffee to spare, let's go back to the kitchen, where we can talk."

He stepped across the couch, snapped off the reading light that was shining in Eleanor's face, and followed the sergeant back to the little white tiled kitchen.

It was seldom he visited the Spencer home. The pleasantness of it, the very evident affection between those two, always gave him a bad twinge in comparison with his own isolated existence.

"I found your note under my door," he said, as Spencer poured two cups of coffee. "So Ostrand is riding you, is he?"

"Worse than that. He's greasing the bamboo slide for me, Noel. Wants one of his Ottawa men in my place. My days with the police are numbered. Look, he saddled me with this Jimmy case and told me to get results 'or else' . . . It looks like 'or else' for me. I've worked day and night, I've got nowhere, and the trail's cold now. If you don't help me get started I'm sunk."

Noel stirred the sugar in his coffee. "I'm glad you are stalled. You've got no business on this case. It's dangerous. It's tender dynamite. You've no right to take chances." He motioned to the living room, where Eleanor lay asleep. "You're married, Herm. Before snow flies you'll be a daddy. Get off this case and stay off."

"How can I? If you put up a kick, Ostrand'll bust me down to a buck cop."

"Let me tell you what to do. Go to Ostrand tomorrow and inform him that you've struck a hot scent. Ask ham for six or seven weeks on the loose, with plenty of expense money. Then slip off somewhere, with Eleanor, and have a real vacation. You rate one. You haven't cashed a furlough in three years."

"I mean exactly what I said. If you stick on duty here you'll have to produce some results, but if you're gone——"

"But I'd have to come back some time, wouldn't I—and what would I have to show for my time?"

"You may have plenty. I hope to nail this outfit in the meanwhile, and if I do I'll see that you get part credit for the job."

Spencer's eyes popped open. "Are you going to start on this?"

"I've started. In the last three days I've dug up a lead, such as it is. I'm leaving Winnipeg tonight. I came around here to ask if you'd give me a little ride in your car. Just north of town. I'd taxi except that it's healthier to slip away on the quiet."

"Why, I'll—sure I'll take you, but—but d'you really mean that you've pried the lid off this case already?"

"Miles from that. I've merely uncovered a promising lead. I'll tell you about it on our drive. Swallow your coffee and let's be traveling."

Along the shore of a little resort lake a few miles north of the city Spencer stopped the car and switched off the lights.

Silent and alert, they crept down to the lake edge, where a small pier jutted out into deep water.

Though it was not yet 3 o'clock, the stars were beginning to dim and the first gray of dawn was reaching up into the eastern sky. A light morning wind was rippling the lake and lap-lapping the wavelets against the boats at anchor in the shallows.

"How'd you find out that Jimmy was a flyer?" Spencer asked, glancing around for lurking shadows.

"His boots. The wear on his boots."

"I saw that wear myself. Thought it was auto pedals."

"No, no. With an auto there's extra wear on the right foot. With the rudder bars of a plane the wear is the same on both feet."

They started out upon the pier. At the far end of it a dark object, larger than the boats, slowly took on outline and resolved itself into a small monoplane, securely anchored and moored.

Noel pointed. "Jimmy came to Winnipeg in that plane, Herm. It has his fingerprints all over it."

"How'd you ever locate it, out here?"

"Hard work. I visited all the air fields and landing lakes within striking distance of town."

"What a little beauty!" Spencer remarked eyeing the craft. A trim, swift Diomede, with tiny three-place cabin, ruddered pontoons, and canvas hood drawn over its radial. It was rocking on the wavelets like a creature asleep. "With a plane like that a fellow could go strange places and do tall things. What luck did you have tracing its registry?"

"Mighty little. It was bought in Seattle eighteen months ago. It dropped out of sight then and it's never been heard of since. It's what the air bureau calls a 'ghost plane'—unregistered, unlicensed, its whereabouts unknown. If Jimmy carried any license or papers, they were faked. He kept this plane as anonymous as he kept himself."

With Spencer following, he stepped down upon a pontoon, unlocked the little cabin, climed in and snapped on his pocket flash. Leaning across toward the left rear window, he pressed on a silver colored button which looked, at first glance, like an ordinary upholstering brad. A panel beneath the window dropped down and exposed a small compartment roughly the size of a briefcase.

From the little niche Noel drew out a pair of silver fox pelts. Beautiful Keewatin furs, perfectly matched with long hairs and soft rich pelage. The pelts were so exquisite and lovely that Spencer unthinkingly reached out and stroked them.

"Jimmy bought these two silvers," Noel stated, "for that girl in his watch, but he had no chance to give them to her before he was killed. But what I wanted to show you is this." He rolled back one of the pelts to the "raw" side and pointed to the red and blue stenciling. These are stamped furs. Royalty stamp. Those serial numbers gave me my lead on Jimmy. He bought these six days ago, at McMurray."

"Fort McMurray? That little jumping off place over northeast in the Athabasca?"

"Yes. He was there at McMurray last Thursday. That's all on earth I know about him, and I don't know anything about these outlanders. I'm flying over there in hopes I can pick up his trail and back track him. Wherever he came from, there I'll find these men."

"You're using this plane?"

"Yes."

"Heavens! Why, it's a dead give away. Those men know this ship. They'll know you're after 'em. They'll hop you."

"That's what I want. That's how it's got to be. I don't know who they are. I'm using this plane deliberately, to lure them into some overt act."

Carnival Woman Shot After Row; D. C. Man Is Held

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fredericksburg, Va., Oct. 7.—Edward R. Garner, 27-year-old Washingtonian, was being held by police here today suspected of being the assailant who shot and critically wounded Mrs. Venie Mae Ellington, 26, carnival trouper, at Comern, near here, shortly before dawn.

She has a fighting chance to recover, asserted physicians at Mary Washington Hospital, where the woman was taken, her legs almost severed by the load of buckshot that police say Garner fired.

According to officers, the party, all carnival workers, arrived in Fredericksburg on a late train last night and taxied to the home of Garner's aunt. Garner allegedly accused Mrs. Ellington of taking his wallet containing $11. The shooting followed.

Sportsman Routs Two Cameramen In Assault Case

George King, local sportsman, may have lost a fight with James A. McNamara, but he won a decision yesterday from a couple of news photographers who tried to take his picture.

The damaged head of William Shrout, Daily News photographer, and the bruised shins of William Klemm, Post staff photographer, will attest to his victory.

King ducked out a side door of Police Court, where the photographers were waiting to take a picture of him and McNamara, and ran down an alley across the street.

The photographers followed. King whirled and picked up a board. Shrout he whacked over the head. Klemm he struck across the shins.

His methods—though not those of the Marquis of Queensbury—nonetheless were effective. King barricaded himself in an office of the Ernest Gichner metal works at 418 Sixth street northwest, from which he disappeared subsequently.

McNamara asked for a jury trial on his arraignment on an assault warrant sworn to by King. The former is manager of Marty Gallagher, heavyweight.

Marriages Increase At 'Divorce Capital'

Reno, Nev., Oct. 7 (AP).—Marriage is booming in Reno, the "divorce capital."

The divorce business, itself on the increase after a slight spring and summer lull, is just holding its own with last year's figures. The number of marriage licenses issued is up more than 25 per cent. In the first nine months of this year, 2,301 divorce suits were filed, only 7 less than in the same period last year. A total of 5,588 marriage licenses were issued in the first nine months of this year, compared with 4,444 in the same months of 1935.

Discomforting Suggestion.

In intimating that he would ask Congress to prolong his present power to devalue the dollar down to 50 per cent of its former gold value, President Roosevelt explained that this authority would only be exercised under the pressure of an international emergency throwing currency adjustments seriously out of line. This implied suggestion that the power to cut the exchange value of the dollar might need to be used as a defensive weapon, in case of a resumption of currency warfare, casts unfortunate doubts on the effectivenes of the currency pact just concluded with Great Britain and France.

If there should prove to be need of a bargaining weapon to protect this country from excessive depreciation of the currencies of other nations, Congress rather than the Executive is the proper agency for deciding when and how that weapon shall be employed. Executive insistence upon retention of emergency powers to devalue would create continued anxiety as to the future of the dollar, and thus have a disturbing effect upon domestic business. It would also tend to raise mistrust as to the possibility of a permanent stabilization of world currencies. That would be a high price to pay for retention of a potential bargaining weapon that would in any case prove inadequate to combat pronounced declines in the value of sterling and other currencies.

When the time comes for definitive stabilization, neither the United States nor any other country ought to enter into negotiations to that end with the idea of obtaining an undue advantage for its own trade in fixing the exchange value of its currency. Permanent stability of the exchanges calls for a candid examination of the economic and financial position of each country, in order to determine the proper value to place upon its currency. Agreements reached by sharp bargaining or overbearing tactics would hold out slight hopes of permanence. An important trading country like the United States has no reason to fear that it will be outbargained or outmaneuvered in stabilization negotiations.

Probably a better way to further world currency stabilization is to give definite assurance that we do not propose to tamper further with the dollar. If our example were not followed by other countries and a renewed period of exchange anarchy should ensue, the responsibility for deciding the form of protective action required would then devolve upon Congress, under executive leadership.

"Too Poor To Save."

The report prepared for the Twentieth Century Fund, upon which Gov. Landon relied in a recent attack on the social security act, placed deserved emphasis upon the unduly heavy burden imposed upon workers by the pay roll taxes levied under the contributory old age pension plan. It pointed out that the enforced saving entailed by these exactions would necessitate cuts in food outlays in case of very poor families. Lower living standards would result, even in families of the $3,000-per-year class, not only directly but also indirectly because of higher living costs necessitated by shift of employer pay-roll taxes to consumers.

The validity of this criticism is most strikingly supported by an analysis of the expenditures of wage earners and low salaried clerical workers published in the September Labor Information Bulletin. Returns from 600 white families living in Detroit and 516 Boston families were examined in detail. Outlays for food ranged from 25.2 to 42.9 per cent of each dollar spent. Clothing, housing and household operation absorbed 40 per cent or more of the consumption dollar in the lowest class and approximately the same proportion of income at higher levels.

The noticeable fact, however, bearing directly upon the effect of the old-age pension plan, is that the amount allocated to savings is so small that it is not classified, presumably being included in the negligible amounts of income devoted to miscellaneous expenditures, or possibly gifts and contributions.

This study by the Bureau of Labor statistics offers convincing confirmation of the view that the failure of many families to save is due not to improvidence but to poverty. When that is the case, compulsory savings under a 3 per cent pay-roll tax may do more harm than good, even if it is for the laudable purpose of providing for old age.

The report to the Twentieth Century Fund favors retention of a contributory system of old-age pensions as psychologically valuable and as an administrative necessity. But it objects to a system of financing which takes excessive toll from low income groups, "too poor to save," that "will be made still poorer" by pay-roll taxes. The recommendation that some part of the cost of the contributory system should be defrayed by the Government to relieve the burden upon those who cannot afford to save is one reasonable way of meeting a difficulty that unquestionably calls for remedial action.

Inept Attack.

Mr. John Hamilton, chairman of the Republican National Committee, continues to be hot and bothered over the fact that David Dubinsky, a former Socialist, is now a Democratic Presidential elector in New York State.

Mr. Dubinsky is head of the International Garment Workers Union, which recently raised money to be used by the Spanish Red Cross for work among loyalist sufferers in the Spanish civil war. Therefore, Mr. Hamilton seems to conclude Mr. Dubinsky is virtually a Communist, one who has "rendered financial aid to Communists in Spain so that they might continue to horrify the civilized world by their murders of clergymen and their pillaging of churches."

When proof was presented that Mr. Dubinsky, far from being a Communist, had fought the Communists in his union both tooth and nail and had succeeded in eliminating them entirely; when it was pointed out to Mr. Hamilton that he was, in effect, attacking a friendly nation with whom the United States maintains normal diplomatic relations, Mr. Hamilton did not appreciate the fragility of the limb on which he has climbed. On the contrary, he returns to the fray with a fiery demand that Government investigators be given "a free hand to rout out the alien agents of Communism in this country." The language is painfully reminiscent of that employed by Hitler. It is utterly at variance with the attitude of Mr. Landon, who happens to be the Republican Presidential nominee.

Before continuing this campaign Mr. Hamilton would do well to realize that in attacking Mr. Dubinsky he is in substance impugning the good faith of the American Federation of Labor, of which organization Mr. Dubinsky was until September 1 a vice president. That post, with a seat on the executive board, he will doubtless occupy again should the present peace negotiations between the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. succeed. The A. F. of L. constitution clearly stipulates that no union officered by Communists can belong to the federation.

Mr. Hamilton should also realize that by all the tenets of international law the government at Madrid to which he takes such strong exception is still the duly constituted government of Spain, against which Gens. Franco and Mola and their supporters rebelled in violation of their oaths to support and defend it.

That atrocities have been committed in the Spanish civil war is indubitable. But one has to confine inquiry to a very limited area to believe that such atrocities are committed only by the loyalists. Indeed Mr. Hamilton Fish Armstrong, editor of Foreign Affairs and a keen student of international developments, in a letter in the New York Times takes Mr. Hamilton very much to task for his assertions in this field. The "fundamental responsibility for the existence of a situation in which such horrors occur," says Mr. Armstrong, "lies with those who have deliberately attacked the elected government of their country, unloosed the floodgates of terror and forced every Spaniard into one or other of the two extremist camps." And he goes on to point out that:

"American citizens have the right to send succor and comfort to the wounded and suffering on either side, or on both sides, in the Spanish war or any other war in which the United States Government is not itself engaged."

A Presidential campaign, to fulfill its proper function in a democracy, should be a time when the opposing groups grapple with the real issues, to further the education and the enlightenment of the electorate. It is disruptive of so desirable an aim to raise, as Mr. Hamilton has done, a furor which has little or nothing to do with the problems before the Nation.

Delaying Key Appointments.

An important decision by the Acting Comptroller General, R. N. Elliott, once more calls attention to the fact that the two key positions in the Government's fiscal set-up are occupied by temporary appointees. Mr. Elliott has been pinch-hitting as Comptroller since the term of J. R. McCarl expired three months ago. And Daniel W. Bell has been serving as Acting Director of the Budget for more than two years.

Mr. Elliott was called upon to decide whether the Narcotics Bureau could legally add to its personnel or equipment by using money obtained from State racing commissions for examining horses believed to have been doped. In this decision was involved the important question as to whether governmental agencies may expand their activities by using funds never appropriated to them by Congress. Mr. Elliott decided they could not. Important as that ruling is, it is only one of many similar decisions that have to be made by the Comptroller in the course of his routine duty.

The formulation of new policies is especially difficult for temporary officials. In this case, Mr. Elliott seems to have followed ably the clear line of reasoning laid down by Mr. McCarl. But that does not minimize the desirability of permanently filling the post at the first opportunity. Surely a technical position of this sort can be awarded to the most competent and experienced man available without political repercussions, even during a campaign.

In the case of the Budget director there seems to be no reason whatever for continuing Mr. Bell on a temporary basis. Chosen as a career man familiar with the details of budget making, Mr. Bell has also proved that he has the combination of judgment, tact and courage which this post requires. Whether or not he is to be given the permanent assignment, the desirability of placing the Budget directorship on a more stable basis, for the tremendous task of preparing the 1938 program of expenditures, is evident.

Noblesse Oblige?

The story of Elliott Roosevelt's alleged plans to make a fortune by selling airplanes to Soviet Russia at fantastic prices has been made public at a most unfortunate time. With political tempers already at high tension, unwarranted inferences are likely to be drawn from Anthony Fokker's version of his agreement with the President's son. Whatever the consequences may be, however, the primary responsibility will trace directly back to young Mr. Roosevelt.

When the affidavit was made over a year ago, the Senate Munitions Committee chose to prevent exploitation of Elliott Roosevelt's glaring indiscretion. Mr. Fokker's deposition had been obtained as the first step toward investigation of the incident. But since the contract was not carried out and did not, therefore, involve the sale of implements of war abroad, the committee decided unanimously not to conduct open hearings on the matter. While not at all averse to smearing in principle Mr. Nye did not wish to smear the President, or at least not at a time when the smearing would have been of small political importance.

The committee is more to be criticized for its pursuit of other sensational tangents irrelevant to its inquiry than for its concealment of young Roosevelt's alleged "chiseling." Yet it is strange that Senator Nye would agree to the suppression of Mr. Fokker's statement that "generally speaking" he has "not needed to resort to corruption of governmental officials" to sell his airplanes. And it is still more strange that the chairman should now so suddenly reverse the committee's decision apparently without consulting any of its other members.

Senator Nye explains his action as a "justifiable" response to the charges in an aviation magazine that his committee was concealing data on this case. But that will not entirely eliminate the suspicion that he found the present moment (less than four weeks before election) a strategic time to publicize the entire story. It would have been far better if the affidavit had been released in the regular course of the committee's investigation.

The curious part played by Senator Nye, however, is overshadowed by the indiscretion of Elliott Roosevelt. There is no evidence whatever to indicate that he had any influence with the Import and Export Bank. Indeed, that institution was merely in the process of organization when the Fokker-Roosevelt contract was signed. Presumably his influence with prospective airplane purchasers in Europe was as grossly exaggerated as his present fumbling endeavor to draw a nonexistent distinction between commercial and military airplanes.

The sting in Mr. Fokker's accusations is not in any violation of the law or any corruption of governmental agencies. Rather it is in disclosure of the evident willingness of this young man to subject the prestige of his family name to suspicion of an exceedingly unpleasant character.

The Ordeal Of Mr. Fruitnight.

George MacDonald's famous line about babies coming from "Out of the Everywhere into the Here" was changed recently from poetic fancy to sad reality. The occasion was a baby show arranged at the Crystal Palace, in London, by Mr. A. E. Fruitnight, member of the Romford Council. Invitations and preparations for 400 entrants went out. Alas, for the best laid plans of politicians, 4,000 entrants responded, perhaps drawn by the exceedingly intriguing name of the exhibit's sponsor.

The judging of baby shows is a precarious business at best, even without such unforeseen complications as Mr. Fruitnight experienced. There is an intangible quality which enters into picking a prize baby which does not affect the selection of a blue ribbon canine. There are certain standards to which a dog must conform, as to stance, coat, ears, etc., before he can enter a competition. That's where the baby show, as far as the babies are concerned, has it all over any other kind. For an infant entry may have curly hair or straight; blue eyes or brown, be fairylike or roly-poly. This throws unrelieved responsibility on the parental instincts, latent or developed, of the judges. And, as every woman knows, a well-placed coo has been known to cop the loving cup when all seemed lost.

One baby—and this is no offhand opinion—is a handful. Five babies, if they happen to be born simultaneously of the same parents, are a sensation. But 4,000 of the dimpled darlings, awaiting judgment on their assorted charms, would frustrate Solomon, not to mention a mere Fruitnight.

Philosophers, physicians, psychologists and Pollyannas tell us to quit worrying, but many of us are so situated that if we were to quit worrying we'd soon quit eating.

Several times in life the average man faces the difficult problem of trying to decide which will cost less: To tell the truth, or hire a lawyer.

Governmental interference with business may not be detrimental in some cases, but no one can deny that it ruined the kidnaping business.

Pretty Elementary.

"Iron And Clay."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the second paragraph of the letter over the signature of Mr. Henry D. Baker in your issue of October 2, he refers to a menace to world governments as a "political pudding of mud and flour." Nearly 700 years ago a prophet of God warned us of this same political mixture using the words "iron and clay" instead of "mud and flour," and prophesied that this mixture would result in the overthrow of all world governments then existing, and the setting up of a world government that would stand forever. I will not take up the space to quote the words of this prophet, but respectfully refer Mr. Baker and the reader to the forty-first, forty-second, forty-third and forty-fourth verses of the second chapter of Daniel.

To the Babylon (confusion) of political mixtures referred to in the first paragraph of his letter, Mr. Baker should have added the Babylon (confusion) of religious mixtures, all of which have been decreed for destruction in the eighteenth chapter of Revelations.

The political, social, economic and religious mixtures so prevalent in the world today are not the underlying cause of the distress of nations, social and economic unrest, and men's hearts failing them for fear. These things are the effects; the real cause of world troubles is that we are on the threshold of a spiritual change in world government.

Permit me to explain what I mean by a spiritual change in world government. The spiritual world is about to be taken from the God of this world, the devil (read II Cor. ii:2), and given to Him whose right it is, Christ, who will tumble down the mighty from their seats and exalt them of low degree. The world has forgotten God, the Creator, and hath exalted gold and man-created institutions.

We have plenty of Churchianity, but very little real Christianity.

"A Lot Of Tightwads."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I had the good fortune to listen to the speech of President Roosevelt, who spoke vigorously against the attempt to connect him with communism, and stated he did not want the support of any advocate of communism. His speech was given with considerable feeling on his part and, in my opinion, it was justified.

It does seem strange to me that those who oppose our great President find fault with something that he is not in any way connected with in their attempt to draw attention away from the good he has done and is still doing. When President Roosevelt took hold of the Government the country was in great distress and everyone was affected by the depression. After three years he has brought us out of our trouble.

Shame on such manhood and womanhood who prefer that our people should suffer rather than spend a few dollars! I am glad that President Roosevelt spoke out as strongly as he did. It looks like we have a lot of tightwads in this country who prefer to let it fall into the hands of Communists rather than take the action that President Roosevelt did by giving immediate relief, satisfying the people and bringing back prosperity. WILLIAM J. GROVE.

Old-Age Insurance.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In line with the same thought as touched upon by one of your correspondents signed J. C. M. this writer would like to recount an incident that might justify his statements to the average person who will permit himself to think upon "Old-Age Insurance" with an unbiased mind. All of us I dare say live with the hopes that in our old age we may not be called upon to beg for a means of existence from either welfare agencies or any of our relatives.

It so happens that this writer had occasion to be present during an interview between an old age recipient in one of the New England States and the "welfare" employe to whom the administering of the pension was intrusted. The gentleman, it appears, had taken a short trip into another county to visit a relative for three weeks. Because of this incident the restrictions set up by the municipal board of pension administrators refused benefits to this worthy individual for that period, in as much as he had sojourned without the limits of his legal domicile.

First and foremost there should be taken from the act of old-age pension the stigma of charity. During our younger days when we are donating to society our labors and our money we have incidentally built up a reserve equal to or greater than any old-line insurance premium upon an endowment policy.

Therefore is it not reasonable that those who are benefitted by such a pension be permitted to use that small bonus in whatever manner they may see fit and spend it where and for whatever they may choose? For one to remain a part of the great foundation upon which society is built during all his years when pleasure and independence have been denied him, to then step across the border line into the age of dependence and there have the finger of restrictions and the attitude of scorn applied to his habitat becomes a bitter pill with the disintegrating qualities of "old age."

No Place To Park.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Up until today I drove from my home on the edge of Takoma Park, D. C., to work at the Commerce Building. Yesterday I got my second ticket within a week for violating parking ordinances around the Commerce Building. I applied six months ago for permission to park in the lot across Fourteenth street—without result.

Although all-day parking is allowed on the Ellipse, all spaces are taken by 7:30 a. m. About half of the building side of Fifteenth street is reserved for officials (they also occupy all of the courts) and on the park side of the street there is only one-hour parking. No parking is allowed on the north end of the building and Monday the Constitution avenue end was changed from a one-hour to a no-parking zone. There has been no all-day parking in the Monument Grounds since the improvement work began there and the restriction of available parking space continues unabated.

Now the incessant marking of cars by police officers causes only one thing—a constant shuttling around of cars from one space to another, with the same automobiles in the same area all day long. Whoever the one-hour zones were designed to benefit doesn't receive any benefit anyway—so why have the restricted zones? Of late the attention of traffic officers to these zones has been scrupulous. Is it because a smaller District budget has influenced the Commissioners to demand the exaction of more revenue from traffic violators? Is it because the traffic problem has suddenly become desperately acute in downtown Washington? Or is it part of a program of retaliation against Maryland cars for the recent campaign of Maryland police against cars with District license plates?

When will we have underground garages? I don't know and I'm the goat—riding to work in a public conveyance just as all other Government clerks will do in the near future. A. R.

Washington, Oct. 6.

In Response To Al Smith.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It seems to me—after having heard Al Smith's speech — that the Democratic Party should give a vote of thanks for the New Deal. Mr. Smith aroused his audience by his "sour grapes" attitude!

He is so "democratic," so enthusiastic for his former party that he could not "financially" afford to be a member of the President's official family. They are not paid starving wages that I know of. As a salaried man (he did not mention in whose employ) he must be making a pretty good salary to be able to afford to refuse a position that we don't know was offered him.

Are the Democratic principles more important than well-planned national policies?

A humorous incident in the "deflated" warrior's broadcast was when he, of all people, asked some interrupter to "speak English."

As to his reference to the so-called "brain trust," I, for one, would rather put my faith in men of brain and learning than in a "brainless trust." The President is also a gentleman farmer, which gives him an understanding of farm problems that Mr. Smith could not very well have had on the "sidewalks of New York." I noticed also that the President, according to Mr. Smith, was only right once—in his speech of September 29. That was when he gave credit handsomely to Mr. Smith for his work in Albany.

In short, Mr. Smith is a big disappointment to all the people who used to respect him.

A READER OF THE POST.

Washington, October 2.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is curious that Al Smith should mention ancient Rome in his radio address. Curious, because it is a great pity he did not look into Roman history earlier. Say right after 1928. For if he had, he would have learned about Pompey the Great, who said he was not a candidate and waited around Rome for the consulship to be offered him, while Julius Caesar was "north of the Rubicon" (Roman for the Middle West) and elsewhere getting the delegates.

Al would also have found out that after Julius got the consulship, Pompey took a walk, and was taken for a ride (in Egypt), but that is another story. So Al, like Pompey, is a disappointed and embittered man. History certainly repeats itself. JOSEPH J. SHIELDS.

Philadelphia, October 2.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Guy d'Aulby in The Post of October 6 has another pro-New Deal "blast" attacking poor old Al Smith because Old Al won't desert democracy for alien New Dealism. Mr. d'Aulby ought to learn that you cannot expect "Old Faithful" to learn new tricks.

Old Al is quite right in saying the New Deal is not democracy. He is dead right in saying that the New Deal is alien and un-American, and that no real Democrat or American ought to vote for it.

Here is a fair sample of the New Deal. For me it is a conclusive earmark of the alien, Red New Deal. One of the first major things done by President Roosevelt after he closed all the banks and after the money changers moved on March 4, 1933, from their temple into the White House was the re-admission of a flock of alien Reds headed by Emma Goldman, whom President Woodrow Wilson had deported in 1919 with 248 alien convicts on the Soviet Ark Buford back to Russia, the land of their dreams.

The day (February 1, 1934) "Red Emma" re-entered the United States on an entry permit, this "wild eyed" anarchist declared to the press she was "more of an anarchist than ever" and that we would never get rid of our Al Capones and John Dillinger criminals until we destroyed our Government! "Red Emma" missed her guess as to Dillinger and at least part of it as to Al Capone. Such re-admissions of Red aliens is characteristic of the New Deal.

I am a Democrat and not a Red, and, like Al Smith, will vote for Landon for America's sake and because I am an American first.

P. AMES.

Tilling The Sea.

With the opening of the traditional oyster season, the oystermen are preparing to harvest a crop that, from the time when it was planted, has been cultivated as assiduously as any farmer ever cared for his garden patch. Indeed, the comparison between oyster and plant cultivation is strikingly close. With oysters as with land crops, there is planting, transplanting, cultivating, weeding and harvesting to be done, each in its season and with the same penalty for the oyster grower who neglects one of the operations that attaches to the husbandman.

If oysters are not literally planted, the shell to which the small fry attaches itself is. Clean shell is shipped to the planting grounds, which have been leased from the State, and strewn evenly along the bottom before the spawning season. The fry attach themselves to these husks of their ancestors and draw from them calcium that they need to build their own shells rapidly. From time to time, particularly during the winter, the oyster boats pass over the beds, dragging huge mops to entangle what is, next to man, the greatest lover of the oyster, the starfish. They are brought to the surface by the mops by thousands and, after being scalded in hot water, are sold for fertilizer.

In addition to the "weeding" for starfish, however, the oyster beds must be, almost literally, "cultivated" by dragging to break up shell clusters and spread the growing oysters evenly over the bottom. Generally, too, at least once during their lifetime, the oysters are dredged up, those growing together broken by hand, and then thrown back. A few months before they are ready to be harvested, the shellfish are dredged up again and transported from their growing beds to other beds in clearer water to avoid any possibility of pollution. And finally, three years or so after the shell was first planted, they are dredged up for the last time and shipped to market.

The bravest man in history, according to the classic definition, was he who ate the first oyster. Second only to him, as any oyster grower will ruefully admit, is the man who takes up the cultivation of oysters. For him, there is no season when his fields lie fallow.

Red Caps Of The Forest.

It is time for another of the seasonal warnings. They come with regularity throughout the year. There is the warning of the winter and early spring against venturing on thin ice. When the ice has disappeared and the waters are warm there are the customary admonitions to the bathers. Fall brings its fire-prevention week with its impressive figures of losses of life and property wrought by the flames.

The fall for a large number of people has another warning. It is now being given. It is embodied in the advice to hunters to wear brightly colored clothes when they pursue deer and other game in the forests. In particular, the red cap is advised. The head of the hunter when protected by a covering of red is not likely to be mistaken for that of a deer even by a novice suffering from an attack of buck fever.

So the advice concerning what the well-dressed hunter should wear takes its place in the succession of seasonal warnings. As to those who venture into the woods during the open season on big game, it may be said that as they become the "red caps" of the forest they increase their chances that they may live to hunt another day.

Crystal Towers.

We have in San Francisco taller buildings pretty nearly all glass—that is, nearly all windows on the outside. On some of them there is little but glass to be seen, the wall work between the windows being so slender and inconspicuous.

But the five-story building announced in New York recently, to be constructed by the Corning Glass Works, is said to be the first tall building in which even the walls will be of glass.

Glass blocks as wall material have already been used in dwelling houses, usually in strips or limited areas where special sun lighting is called for. For such purposes the new glasses through which there is only one way seeing may have special advantages, provided the builders do not accidentally set the blocks wrong side to.

One by one the fairy tales come true. The Oriental story of the Tartar Khan who lived in an iron yurt has long been overmatched by the fact of modern metal construction. Now the tale of the Persian prince's tower of crystal is to be replaced by fact.

Sleep Is A Gamble.

While we do not pretend to Dr. Logan Clendening's wisdom on "Diet and Health," we have views on insomnia, which he discussed recently, based on contracts with all sorts and conditions of men. Briefly, those views boil down to this: That except in the case of young people, sleep is a good deal of a gamble, and there isn't much that can be done about it.

Some persons just naturally drop off to sleep—or so they assure us—when their heads touch the pillow. Others, who lead apparently just as harmless lives, struggle and toss. Still others have a mixed experience. Sometimes they go to sleep at once. At other times they lie awake. And they don't know why in either case.

Our judgment based on these conflicting reports is that most persons have to get along as best they can, and that they need not worry. Whether they get all the sleep they want or not, they will pull through until old age or a motorcar gets them.

Haiti Today

By
Dantes Bellegarde.

The 'Black Republic' Is Making Progress.

What is, from a social and political point of view, the present condition of the people of Haiti? I cannot answer this question without insisting on the conditions under which the young state came into existence.

On the day following January 1, 1804, the Haitian nation was nothing but a herd of savages who had suddenly acquired their liberty. At the top were a few chiefs whose authority rested solely on brute force. At the bottom was the mass of liberated slaves. There was no cohesion, no real hierarchy. Nothing but hatred of the colonial system had united for an heroic effort these Negroes coming from various and often inimical tribes of Africa.

From a material point of view, there was nothing left of the marvelous prosperity of St. Domingue. The incendiary torch had been the red flag that Dessalines and his lieutenants had waved over the rich plantations where the Negroes had so long groaned in the most horrible servitude. The colonists had never thought of creating an economic organization which might serve as a model for the new freedmen; their system had rested entirely on servile labor, and to enjoy the fruit of the labor of others had been their sole aim. They had lost the incentive for personal effort which competition develops, and they had completely effected the divorce between property and labor. "The master is he who does not work; to be free is not to work," was the detestable gospel bequeathed to the freed Negroes by the colonial system.

From a moral and intellectual point of view, the situation was even worse. The colonists of St. Domingue had set the example for all sorts of vices, and a French author (Moreau de St. Mery) says that the white men had created no schools in the colony, neither for themselves nor for their slaves. Toussaint Louverture learned to read and write when he was 50 years old. The founder of Haitian independence, Jean Jacques Dessalines, could not read and write.

For more than 20 years, until Haitian independence was officially recognized by the French government (in 1825), Haiti remained in complete isolation, constantly apprehensive of an offensive return of the French. This enervating expectation kept all the nation in arms and prevented it from attempting any serious effort toward organization.

• • • •

There is certainly not one among the modern states which started under such adverse conditions. The Haitian nation no longer presents, as is evident at first sight, the aspect of the amorphous mob of 1804. It rapidly created its organs of life. It is today provided with all the elements which, in the political as well as in the economical sphere, will give it definite scope. It has its planters, its skilled workmen, its industrial workers, its traders, its intellectual class.

In Europe as in the United States, and perhaps in Latin America, the most erroneous ideas prevail concerning Haiti. They are accepted without question and are repeated with complacency, thereby causing considerable wrong to a young nation which, to develop itself, needs the benevolent support of the richer and more enlightened nations.

First, the chief accusation made against the Haitians is that they practice Voodooism. In certain American minds the word Voodoo evokes terrific scenes of orgies and massacre. What must one think of the odious accusation of cannibalism which some writers have dared also to formulate against the Haitians? "It is caused," writes Dr. Leon Audain (a great Haitian scientist) "by an unpardonable error, by malignity, or by notoriously bad faith. A few crimes of this sort, the result of individual aberrations, were committed in the past and punished by penalty of death, but it is supremely unjust to incriminate a whole country for purely isolated occurrences abhorred by the general conscience of the population of Haiti."

The Voodoo dance is, in fact, nothing but a form of amusement. At certain periods of the year, some of the people—especially in the rural districts—meet to dance to the beat of the drum and the ringing of bells, of a triangle, and of the cata. They kill a goat, a lamb, chickens, or guinea fowls . . . to be eaten. With these gastronomic meetings are doubtless mingled magic and superstitious practices. But it is not surprising to find such things among uneducated people. The importance of these superstitious practices must not, however, be exaggerated. The beliefs of the lower class are indeed childish and can be explained by ignorance. They are just like those of the people of Martinique as described by Lafcadio Hearn in his picturesque "Two Years in the French West Indies."

• • • •

It is important to note that all our people are Christians. Even those who remain most strongly addicted to religious practices brought from Africa during the period of slavery place the Church's God far above their African deities.

What no traveler has ever denied in regard to the people of Haiti is their great gentleness and the simplicity of their customs. Hospitable and kind, the Haitian receives the stranger with cordiality. Any foreigner traveling in the interior of the country can call on the occupant of any cabin, always sure of being greeted with the most eager welcome. He can, without fear, cross over the island from end to end, travel day after day and night after night on our deserted roads, enter our thick forests, climb up the step gorges of our mountains, and nowhere find bandits, waylayers or assassins. Haiti has no venomous reptiles, nor gangsters, racketeers nor kidnapers, and . . . Lindbergh could live in Haiti without fear for his baby. William Powell, former colored Minister from the United States to Port-au-Prince, who spent many years in Haiti, has given out this opinion: "The Haitians are industrious and generally honest. Great crimes and felonies are rare."

Unfortunately, the excess brought about by our too-frequent revolutions and so greatly exaggerated by many malicious writers have created in the world outside a most regrettable reputation for our people, whereas their sociable habits and manners and their undeserved misfortunes should on the contrary arouse universal sympathy.

No one deplores more deeply than I do the "revolutions" that have all too frequently upset the economic life of the Haitian nation and given many a setback to its social evolution. Nevertheless, the history of Haiti clearly shows that those disturbances were often the outcome of governmental despotism or dictatorship. Most of these so-called revolutions may be regarded as so many painful stages on the road of social progress.

Blazer And Bell

By William Lyon Phelps

A Canadian Poet.

Speaking of Canadian poets, and I promise not to speak of them again for some weeks anyhow, and possibly months, I was delighted to receive a copy of the Kingston Whig-Standard for August 15, which has a picture of a Canadian poet standing behind an enormous bell. I was also delighted to see that he was wearing a striped blazer, for I am wearing one at this moment. I am very fond of blazers, and 50 years ago they were quite generally worn by Americans; I have been endeavoring for years to bring the fashion back, with indifferent success. And yet, somehow, I feel it coming.

Two years ago, suspenders came back, why not blazers? Ten years ago the foremost haberdashery man in an Eastern city told me he had not sold a pair of suspenders or a nightgown in 15 years.

The poet with blazer and bell is Walter Havelock Robb. He lives near Kingston, on the banks of the St. Lawrence River, and his bell weighs 600 pounds. According to the newspaper, it is "the first poet's bell ever cast in the history of the world."

The bell was cast in Croydon, England, and will be swung at the poet's bird sanctuary, from four tall pine tree trunks.

The bell is named Gitchi Nagamo, which in Algonquin language (not the language of the Algonquin in New York) means "A beautiful song." On a clear and windless day it can be heard five miles away.

The poet loves birds and it will be rung at dawn in early summer when the bird chorus is at its best.

By Frank H. Hedges.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

Tokyo.

THE TOKYO foreign, war and navy offices, seeing Nanking waxing steadily stronger, are willing to make some comparatively trivial sacrifices in return for a fixation of the North China status to Tokyo's satisfaction, which is one of actual but not nominal control in a local political, a military and an economic way.

North China to Japan means the five provinces of Hopei (containing the cities of Peiping and Tientsin and most important of the five), Shantung (second in importance, economic and otherwise), Shansi, Suiyuan and Charhar. Two of these, Charhar and Hopei, are governed now by the Hopei-Charhar Political Council, headed by Gen. Sung Che-yuan and his Twenty-ninth (Chinese) Army. Nominally he is under the control of Gen. Chiang Kai-shek at Nanking, but actually he enjoys a large degree of "autonomy." Japan has something like 5,000 well-armed and well-trained soldiers in these two provinces, mostly in Hopei, and both are immediately adjacent to Manchukuo, with its tens of thousands of Japanese soldiers. Gen. Sung is believed to be loyal to Nanking, but when Tokyo cracks the whip he has to jump, and Tokyo is quite fond of cracking it.

There is, in addition, the East Hopei autonomous anti-Communist government, with headquarters at Tungchow, 14 miles east of Peiping, headed by Yin Ju-keng, who has declared his independence of Nanking. Yin commands only 22 small districts, or hsien, but they are strategically and economically of great importance. He has put into effect a tariff schedule about one-fourth that of the Nanking government, and it is this low tariff which Japanese smugglers pay and contend that it is not smuggling but "special trade." Needless to say, not a cent of this customs revenue goes to Nanking.

From time to time, there is recrudescence of talk that Tokyo will use its good offices to bring about the amalgamation of these two governments. Such talks is nonsense. If Yin goes over to Nanking he will be shot as a traitor, and Tokyo's policy until it has got all it wants out of Nanking in North China is to keep Yin Ju-keng and his puny government as an ace in the hole.

• • •

Yin Ju-keng Harbors Imperial Ambitions.

IF AT ANY time Sung Che-yuan with Nanking backing him proves too intractable, Tokyo can produce Yin and his "government," asserting that it is the true government of North China and forcing Nanking to acknowledge this unless Nanking is willing to take up arms. There is ample precedent in Japan's own history for a tactic of this nature.

Yin is sincerely pro-Japanese and is not only willing but eager to bring about such a development. He knows that his life would go out if Nanking could lay hands on him. He has a Japanese wife and your correspondent is convinced, following a long conversation with him in his Confucian temple headquarters at Tungchow, that he harbors dynastic ambitions, that he dreams of founding the Yin Dynasty in an Empire of North China under Japanese patronage. Japanese officials laugh at this, but it cannot as yet be safely laughed away and must be regarded as one possibility although, fortunately, not a probability.

Shansi, the third of the five North China provinces, is more effectively under the control of the Central Government of China than it has been for two decades past. For many years this province was virtually independent, first of the old Peking and then of the Nanking government. Its head was "Model Governor" Yen-Hsi-shan, who closed his borders to all civil war, threatening to take up arms against any invader, but otherwise refusing resolutely to take any part in Chinese politics or civil war. As a result, his province prospered and earned the sobriquet of the "Model Province." He was, however, drawn into both civil war and politics some time ago, and as a consequence has lost his province.

Last spring there was an invasion of so-called "Chinese Reds" into Shansi from adjacent Shensi, and Gen. Chiang Kai-shek sent one of his most trusted lieutenants and an army northward to drive out these "Reds." This he succeeded in doing, but instead of returning the province to the "Model Governor" he continued to occupy it himself.

There is something going on in Suiyuan Province at this moment, but exactly what no one seems to know. Apparently, Japanese and Manchukuo troops have moved into that province on the pretext of fighting Communists, but with the real objective of placing it effectively within the sphere of Japanese control before Gen. Chiang Kai-shek can reclaim it.

• • • •

The fifth province, that of populous and wealthy Shantung with its lovely seaport of Tsingtao, is trembling in the balance at present. With Canton and its hinterland subdued and reunited under him, Gen. Chiang has turned his attention toward Shantung with the object of bringing it effectively under his rule as it now is in name only. He has sent emissaries there and may send troops, unless he can persuade by threats only to force the provincial head, Gen. Han Fu-chu, to resign and be replaced by a man personally loyal to Chiang Kai-shek and the Nanking administration. Japan views this activity with alarm and the Japanese press is raising a great furore about it, terming it "anti-Japanese." It undoubtedly is one of the factors bringing about the Tientsin conference and what to Tokyo seems a modified China policy.

The Japanese Ambassador to China, Shigeru Kawagoe, presided at the Tientsin conference and will go on to Nanking, where he will negotiate with Gen. Chiang Kai-shek and the other members of the Central Chinese government within a month or so, presumably presenting to them the proposed compromise settlement drawn up by Japanese only in Tientsin. There is good likelihood that Nanking will accept it, perhaps with some modification in Nanking's favor.

Chiang Kai-shek, however ambitious he may be, is an eminently practical man and above all a realist. He is fully conscious of the physical might of Japan and of the folly of seeking to combat it on the field of battle if combat can be in any way honorably avoided. He is undoubtedly willing to sacrifice much in North China to gain more in the rest of the republic, to gain freedom from Japanese persecution and further inroads, if he can make a sacrifice that is not so great the Chinese people will refuse to accept it and drag even Chiang down from his present dictatorial position. He will fight Japan just short of that, to him, catastrophe.

Dr. Sun Yat-sen, long before his death, counseled his fellow-countrymen that they should recognize Japan's special position in old Manchuria and cease trying to overthrow it for the time being. That special position was unpalatable to him, Dr. Sun stated, but nevertheless he acknowledged that it was a fact and not a theory, and that it was best to deal with facts on a factual basis.

• • •

Chiang Has Learned From Manchurian Issue.

Chiang Kai-shek, being a realist, also believes in dealing with facts, and the position of Japan in North China now is a fact, as is the great military and, comparatively, great economic strength of the Japanese Empire. Moreover, he has learned a valuable lesson from the Manchurian adventure, where he has lost an empire by refusing to compromise and work on a basis of reality. He need not be expected to repeat this mistake unless forces beyond his control drive him to it.

Japan, too, has learned a valuable lesson from its adventure into Manchukuo and on the continent. Manchukuo has not proved the economic bonanza expected, nor does it afford an outlet for Japan's expanding population. Manchukuo is today and will be for years to come a drain on the Japanese treasury, both national and private, before ever it can be expected to pay dividends. The Tokyo government has no desire to run the bill up still higher now by unfortunate military philandering on the plains of North China.

For these reasons, there is good prospect of Tokyo and Nanking coming to working terms as regards North China, neither obtaining all it desires but each obtaining enough to ease the situation greatly. Nanking will probably insist on the exclusion of the two provinces of Shantung and Shansi, or the provinces of the East and West Mountains, from Japan's special sphere of influence in North China. This would leave to Tokyo the three northernmost provinces of Hopei, Charhar and Suiyuan, which may or may not content it.

On such a basis, Tokyo would publicly acknowledge, probably with full ceremony, Nanking's sovereignty over these three provinces, but see that actual political, military and economic control was in its own hands. This would serve to establish the flank guard against any Soviet Russian advance which Japan's war office considers so vital, would permit the economic development and exploitation of these provinces with Japanese capital, and would insure Chinese in office there who were no more than Tokyo's puppets.

At Budapest

By

Effects Of The Death Of Gen. Julius Gomboes.

Since 1919 Hungary has been a kingdom without a king, headed by an admiral without a navy. And for the last few years the dominant political figure in the realm has been a Fascist army officer who openly admired Hitler and Mussolini but who, in one of his last statements, declared his intention of extending the secret ballot in the interests of Magyar democracy.

Europe is so close-knit an entity that the death of Gen. Julius Gomboes, Premier of Hungary, has aroused mingled emotions of hope and dread far beyond the confines of Magyardom. For Gomboes' passing may result in a change in policy at Budapest and therefore affect the delicate balance of power now obtaining on the continent. Despite Marxian determinism, personalities can and frequently do play a decisive part in affairs. And every nation, however, much it may appear to be the prisoner of iron necessity, has more than one string to its foreign policy bow.

That is why the developments that may now take place at Budapest will be watched with deep interest in Berlin and Rome, in Prague, Bucharest and Belgrade and the other capitals. And that is why, too hopes which 17 years of exile have not extinguished, have flared up anew at Steernockerzeel, in Belgium, where live the ex-Empress Zita and her 24-year-old son, Otto.

All these years she has been moving heaven and earth to regain for the Hapsburgs one of the two empty thrones they used to occupy. Disappointments have been frequent. But the death of Gomboes does remove a bitter and resourceful enemy. It—was he, more than any other individual who prevented the restoration of Zita's husband, the Emperor Charles, in 1921. And as long as he lived and remained in power the kingdom of Hungary was certain to remain kingless. Yet even if monarchist sentiment in that country was stronger than it actually is, international factors operating against restoration would appear to be strong enough to thwart the ambitions of Zita and Otto. The very same factors have certainly operated to prevent the return of the Hapsburgs to Austria where, during the last few years, the government has been friendly to the old dynasty and has gone a long way in removing all the internal obstacles to a restoration.

Now, as in the past, therefore, the Hapsburg question in Hungary will probably continue to be academic. Of more immediate importance is the question whether the death of Gomboes will lead to any change in Hungary's relations with Italy and Germany.

For years Hungary's relations with Italy have been close-knit and friendly. Mussolini is a strong champion of treaty revision in central Europe, so long as that does not involve any sacrifices by the Italian kingdom itself. The tripartite treaty of March, 1934, binding Italy, Hungary and Austria together, was merely an extension of the Rome-Budapest entente and was made possible by Austria's fears of being swallowed up by Nazi Germany and its consequent acceptances of Italian aid.

But Gomboes, personally, was anything but hostile to Hitler. He had established relations with the future Fuehrer in Hitler's Munich days and had founded in Hungary a society, the Awakening Magyars, whose racial views were not dissimilar to those of the Nazis. When Hitler came into power in Berlin, Gomboes was one of the first European statesman personally to pay his respects to the new chancellor of the Reich. Yet he was wise enough to avoid becoming wholly subservient either to Berlin or Rome and to keep on friendly terms with both. In that way Hungary has been in a position to play one against the other.

The establishment, as a result of an Italo-German compromise on the Austrian question, of something like an entente between the two dictatorships, gave Hungary two powerful friends in camp. But whether the new-found friendship between Hitler and Mussolini can last is problematical. Only yesterday it was reported that the Fascist government has indicated its irritation with the Schuschnigg regime for showing too great a friendliness for the Third Reich, and has demanded that Starhemberg be again placed in a position of power. No nation can be the satellite of two powers.

There is the possibility, therefore, that, should German-Italian relations again become strained, Hungary will be compelled to swing more into the orbit of one or the other of these great powers. And the direction it will take will depend, in a measure at least, on the personality of Gomboes' successor.

In general, however, Hungarian foreign policy will remain what is is whoever takes over the direction of national affairs. The determining fact will be as it has been ever since the treaty of Trianon—Hungary's desire to regain its lost territories and population.

That treaty saw the distribution to the succession states of 68 per cent of Hungary's pre-war territory and 59 per cent of its population. But now as in the past the beneficiaries of the surgical operation on the Hungary of the Hapsburgs—Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and Rumania—are united in their determination to prevent Hungary from pushing out beyond its present frontiers.

Their reply to Hungarian revisionist demands is exactly the same as that of British Conservatives on the subject of redistribution of colonial territories: "What we have we hold."

The Once Over

The White Meat Issue.

The story from Niles Center, Ill., that the violet ray had been used to produce a chicken with all white meat took its place in the political picture and national Presidential campaign today. Both Roosevelt and Landon claim the credit for it.

• • • •

Already feeling has reached a dangerous height and the whole situation may be boiled down by November to the simple question, "Do you want all white meat? And if so, with whom?"

• • • •

Jim Farley started it all when he leaped into the breach with a declaration that the Niles Center white chicken was exclusively an Administration bird.

"The President has had the all white meat idea in mind ever since he took office," declared Mr. Farley with feeling. "Not only that, but he is working right now on the boneless wing!"

• • • •

Mr. Hamilton, of the Landon forces, ridiculed the Farley claims and contended that the G. O. P. had been keeping the all white meat bird under cover to spring next week and stampede the country. "Who gave America the skinless frankfurter?" cried Mr. Hamilton. "The Republican Party! Who gave it boneless shad? The Republican Party!"

• • • •

"Bunk!" replied Mr. Farley. "The Administration has been working to give the American people nothing but white meat for years. We would have accomplished this long ago, except that we ran out of chickens and had to use buzzards. And you know how hard it is to make a buzzard sit still for a violet ray treatment!"

• • • •

"What about the dark meat vote, Mr. Farley? Are you ignoring the fact that a great many people like the second joint?"

"Tugwell has this under consideration and will soon announce a chicken on which the meat can be made optional."

• • • •

Mr. Farley was quite worked up. "What other President in all history ever strove to assure the rank and file white meat, the whole white meat and nothing but white meat? Did Washington? What about Lincoln? Did he ever do anything about white and dark chicken? No, he made the people take it as it came."

Excerpts From Hull's Speech on Trade Policies

The outstanding question before the world today is peace. The present Administration is dedicated to a program of constructive effort for peace. It has followed, in all its dealings with other peoples, the good neighbor policy. It is not my purpose to discuss this evening all the constructive efforts made during the past 3½ years to make the good neighbor policy effetcive for peace. I shall stress one phase only of that policy which I feel is basic—the economic or trade phase.

The trade agreements program is an instrument for the furthering not only of prosperity but also of peace. The 14 trade agreements that have been made are not only trade-building achievements. They are in every true sense "treaties of commercial peace." These 14 agreements and those that are to follow are designed not alone to re-establish the flow of mutually profitable trade between the United States and the rest of the world and to restore full and stable prosperity for our Nation by reopening adequate markets for our vital surplus-producing branches of agriculture, mining and manufacturing industry.

They are also a means of exerting our influence for the re-establishment throughout the world of flourishing trade, based upon equal treatment for all, upon fair dealing and friendly liberality in international commercial relations. These agreements are "treaties of commercial peace" both in the sense that they provide for nondiscriminatory treatment of commerce and in the sense that they promote economic disarmament.

They are a solvent for economic distress, which breeds war. Economic distress opens the way for the demagogue and the agitator, foments internal strife, and frequently leads to the supplanting of orderly democratic government. It creates international friction, fear, envy, and resentment, and destroys the very foundations of world peace. Some nations are tempted to seek escape from distress at home in military adventures beyond their frontiers. Even peace-loving nations are forced to divert their national effort from the creation of wealth and from peaceful well-being to the construction of armaments.

Foreign Markets Rebuilt.

Our foreign markets were wrecked under the Smoot-Hawley tariff, which had been based on the embargo principle. Our foreign markets are being rebuilt under the trade agreements program, through its method of carefully negotiated concessions on a mutually profitable basis. From a level of slightly over $1,600,000,000 in 1932 and 1933, our exports rose to $2,280,000,000 in 1935 and continue this year on an upward trend. The increase in our exports in 1935 over the preceding year constituted 40 per cent of the entire increase in the combined exports of all countries of the world. This year the percentage is running even higher.

Our critics offer the Nation nothing but a return to Smoot-Hawleyism that will inevitably destroy the precious gains which have so far been attained in our drive toward a revival of foreign trade. They bolster up their attack by wantonly misrepresenting some of the essential features of the trade agreements program. They say that the extension to other countries of concessions embodied in the agreement with any one country is giving away something for nothing. That is not true. We receive in exchange from each foreign country to which we may extend these concessions the pledge that our commerce will enjoy all the concessions granted by it in the past or to be granted in the future to any and all other countries. That is the only way in which we can make our trade secure against wholesale discrimination.

Let me emphasize that the alternative would be not only to discriminate against 50 countries when we make a concession to one, but also to deny ourselves the right to equal treatment at the hands of other nations. Further, this rule contributes greatly to commercial stability and peace. Without it world trade must become merely a business of cutthroat bargaining and bartering on an ever-narrowing scale. Let me add that as our program develops, such countries as refuse American goods equal opportunities in their markets will be denied the benefits of equality of opportunity in our market. Our hands are free to deal with their products as may be sound and just.

Unfairness Charged.

Again, attack has been made regarding the methods by which the terms of the trade agreements had been decided. Our critics have charged us with using "star chamber" proceedings. This accusation came first of all from powerful Washington lobbies and most loudly of all from the representatives of particular industrial interests who have not found it as easy as before to make their wishes prevail. These neither waited for notice nor cared for notice when the Smoot-Hawley bill was log-rolled through Congress and rammed down the throats of the American people.

The methods pursued involve procedures with regard to public notice, public hearings and conferences, no different in essence than those long employed by Congressional committees and by such semi-judicial bodies as the Tariff Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, and the Interstate Commerce Commission. To criticize in this one instance and to commend in all others approaches gross unfairness. A most carefully selected and well-trained organization, assembled from the interested departments of the Government—State, Treasury, Agriculture, Commerce, and the Tariff Commission—has handled every detail and has welcomed every presentation of fact from all sources. It has thus conscientiously and capably carried out the mandate of Congress.

The most serious accusation which our critics make against the trade agreements program is that under its operation the American farmer has been sold down the river. Gov. Landon and the Republican National Committee has reiterated, over and over again, the charge that in the execution of the trade program the Roosevelt Administration has taken the American farmer out of the foreign market and has put the foreign farmer in the American market.

Our agricultural exports have increased steadily since 1932. The 14 trade agreements which have so far been negotiated give us far-reaching concessions on scores of agricultural products, ranging as high as 50 per cent to 60 per cent in tariff-rate reductions, some complete removals of rates, and extensive liberalization of import quotas and other barriers. These concessions relate to one-third of our normal farm exports to the 14 countries involved. With respect to another third of our farm exports to these countries, pledges have been made to continue existing favorable treatment. Our program has a definite tendency to drive down trade barriers abroad. Within the past week, almost literally while my train was moving West, France, Italy and Switzerland have substantially lowered tariff duties on products of the American farm—notably wheat, apples, pears and other fruits. The world economic log jam is beginning to give way.

These concessions have already assisted exports of many farm products, in some cases notwithstanding obstacles created by the drought. Our agricultural exports to Cuba more than doubled during the first year of the agreement and have been well maintained since that time. During the first seven months of the Canadian agreement, exports of hams and shoulders to Canada increased 169 per cent; and of other pork, pickled or salted, 329 per cent, as compared with the same period of 1935, while lard exports to Canada increased 92 per cent. Comparison for the same periods in the case of fruit shows increases of 49 per cent for dried fruits, 68 per cent for canned fruits, and in the case of apples an increase of 127 per cent. These striking benefits of the concessions we have obtained illustrate the possibilities of the program as a means of restoring the farmer's foreign market. Naturally trade recovery cannot be brought about overnight.

In the light of this evidence, what fair-minded person will accept the reckless assertion that the Roosevelt Administration has taken the American farmer out of the foreign market

I will tell you just when our farmer was taken out of his foreign markets. It was when our agricultural exports slumped from $1,692,900,000 in 1929 to $822,400,000 in 1932 and when our farmers thus sustained a staggering loss of over one billion dollars in their foreign markets. This occurred under the Hoover Administration, under the Smoot-Hawley tariff. There has not been one dollar of loss since that time.

• • • •

It is true that in 1935 and during the course of the present year there has been an increase in our imports of agricultural products. The increase in 1935 over 1934 amounted to $247,000,000. Of this amount, $75,000,000 represented wholly non-competitive products—coffee, rubber, bananas, etc. Of the remainder, exclusive of sugar which is governed by international agreement, only $13,000,000 was accounted for by commodities affected by the trade agreements. Practically all the rest of the increased imports came in to repair the ravages of the disastrous drought which seared our farms in 1934 and the effects of which were felt most severely in 1935.

The agreements that have been negotiated involve but a small number of agricultural rates. Even after the downward adjustments had been made, these rates still stand around or above the level of the Fordney-McCumber act, the rates of which afforded at the time a larger measure of protection than ever before in American history. In no reciprocal trade agreements have there been any tariff reductions on wheat, corn, rye, oats, or any of the other commodities brought in to eke out shortages of feedstuffs caused by the drought. Our critics have not the fairness to admit that these emergency drought imports are temporary in character and will disappear as the effects of the drought wear off.

These products were brought in over the Smoot-Hawley tariff rates because they were desperately needed by the farmers to save their livestock from starvation or premature slaughter—not because our gates were thrown open to the foreigner by any act or policy. I desire here and now to nail down the atrocious falsehood to the contrary, so shamelessly circulated throughout the farm belt in an unscrupulous effort to prejudice the farmer.

There are three commodities the tariff rates on which have been effected by the trade agreements that are singled out by the critics of the program in their attempt to prove, by specific instance, that our farmers have been gravely injured in the process. Gov. Landon, in his speech of two weeks ago, devoted most of his time to a discussion of these items.

He first mentioned cheese and proclaimed that the imports of cheese from Canada increased sevenfold, and that the prices of the particular kind of cheese on which his fancy fell, cheddar, had declined since January 1, from 17 to 12½ cents a pound. What he failed to state was that the price decline was a seasonal phenomenon, that his price quotation was several months old when he delivered his speech, and at the very time he spoke, the price of cheddar cheese was over 17 cents—not 4½ cents below, but ½ cent above the price on January 1. It was 25 per cent higher than a year ago at the same time when there was no agreement with Canada. And let me add that today it is higher than at any time since the depression began.

The second commodity singled out by the Governor was Babassu nuts and oils. He referred to it in the following rather fanciful language:

"Under the present agreement, a new jungle product is permitted to come into this country in direct competition with American dairy products."

The truth is that the trade agreement with Brazil permits nothing with respect to Babassu nuts and oil that was not permitted under the Smoot-Hawley act. Babassu nuts and oil are found on the free list, where they always have been.

Refers to Price Drop.

Finally, Gov. Landon referred to the decline of cattle prices earlier in the year as evidence of the adverse effect upon cattlemen of the trade agreement with Canada. There was a decline of cattle prices during the first half of this year, particularly fat cattle. But attempts to explain the decline on the basis of the Canadian agreement simply fail to stand up under scrutiny. What the Governor failed to point out was:

(1) That the duty cut was limited to a quantity of animals equivalent to ¾ of 1 per cent of our average annual slaughter, and even on this quantity the duty was as high as in the Fordney-McCumber act.

(2) That the class of animals imported from western Canada is mostly feeders, whereas the chief decline in domestic prices was in fat cattle.

(3) That the decline in prices of fat cattle was due almost entirely to abnormally large supplies of domestic fat cattle marketed since the first of the year as a result of a great expansion of feeding operations last fall.

(4) That imports from Canada constitute only some 1 or 2 per cent of our domestic slaughter, or one or two cattle out of each 100 sent to market.

(5) That conditions in Canada and the United States were such that most of the Canadian cattle imported would have come in anyhow even if the duty had not been touched.

Nor is there anything but special pleading in the attempts to make it appear that a few extra carloads of animals received in a particular market on a particular day is anything but a normal market phenomenon regardless of whether the cattle are imported or domestic. Large receipts come in also from Montana on a particular day. Attempts to attach special importance to imports in this connection is nothing more than trying to make the parts seem larger than the whole. Incidentally, also, the Governor failed to point out that the price of the very grade of animals that he quoted as having declined during the first half of the year from $9.75 per hundred to $7.25 had risen by the time he made his speech to $8.65.

In the light of all this evidence, what fair-minded person will accept the reckless assertion that the Roosevelt Administratoin has taken the domestic market away from the American farmer and has handed that market over to the foreign farmer?

Gov. Landon was right. The American farmer has been sold out. But the Governor is mistaken as to who did the selling and when it occurred. The "sell-out" took place during the Hoover Administration, and it was the Smoot-Hawleyites who did the work.

Gov. Landon has permitted his views and his utterances to be shaped by the same interests that were behind the Smoot-Hawley tariff.

The very authors of the farmers' ruin prior to 1933 now ask him to turn on and smite the Roosevelt Administratoin with full knowledge of the incalculable service it has rendered the farmer. I repeat that the Governor, in his Minneapolis speech, after paying lip service to the principle of foreign trade and tariff reciprocity, declared his support of principles and methods for carrying out a reciprocal trade program which would render it completely sterile and make it thus a sham and a fraud. The country will regret to see this discussion of our most vital economic problem and of constructive methods for dealing with it made the subject of confused, inaccurate and incoherent statements such as characterized the Governor's speech.

By the Associated Press.

Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 7.—A leader of the world movement for co-operative selling, buying, manufacturing and finance declared today "it ambition is to supplant capitalism" with help of government.

Henry J. May, of London, England, general secretary of the International Co-operative Alliance, asserted that the movement could be the greatest influence for world peace, "with greater power than the League of Nations by far."

May expressed his views in an interview on the eve of the tenth biennial congress of the Co-operative League of the U. S. A.

1,000 Will Attend.

Approximately 1,000 delegates are expected to attend a three-day session. He is making a month's study of American co-operatives.

May did not say that capitalism was the direct target of the co-operative movement. Capitalism, he explained, stands in the way of a campaign to lower the people's cost of living by giving to them much of the profit now made by private industry.

Certain enterprises, he added, are not suitable for the co-operative plan. They include mining and heavy manufacturing. "These should be undertaken by the State or municipalities," May said.

A participant in the co-operative movement for 50 years, the International Alliance's general secretary asserted that $1,100,000,000 is invested in co-operative stores and manufacturing in Great Britain, which have 7,500,000 members.

Control Is Object.

Discussing the potential effect of co-operating on world peace May said they should be able to solve the problem of international exchange by organizing the supply of goods for the demand of the co-operative world.

Competition and tariff walls could be eliminated, he added, by countries renouncing the manufacture of goods which other nations could manufacture better and cheaper.

The Britisher declined to comment on the growth of co-operative store and credit unions in the United States. He said he had come over to determine the reason for their expansion.

Fat Girls Get The Go-By—Slim Girls Win Men

Lose Fat The Easy Way—Without Starvation Diets, or Back-Breaking, Bending and Rolling Exercises.

Here's a way to get rid of ugly fat that works hand in hand with Nature. Millions of people are losing millions of pounds of flabby flesh and getting back slender figures, without the need of starvation diets or back-breaking exercises.

Medical science has discovered that one of the causes of too much fat lies in a little gland. It is the duty of this tiny gland to make about one drop and a half every day of a vital fluid. This helps the body "burn" up food and excess fatty tissues just as a good draft of air helps the furnace to burn up coal without forming "clinkers". If this little gland doesn't make this drop and a half of fluid every 24 hours, many people take on ugly fat.

Doctors correct this condition by feeding this little gland the substance it lacks—and Marmola Prescription Tablets are based on this same method. Millions are using them with success. They are prepared by a world-famous medical laboratory. Their formula is published in every package so you know what you are taking.

So don't waste time and money with starvation diets or back-breaking exercises. Go to your druggist today and get a box of Marmola. Try this simple, easy way to get rid of excess fat.

A 'First Lady' of the Stage

HELEN GAHAGAN.

Her Home, Her Son, Her Actor-Husband, Melvyn Douglas, College Days, Opera and Radio—All Precede Discussion of Theater and Her Current Role.

She proved that yesterday in an interview that skimmed a number of subjects—her home; her 3-year-old son, Peter; her actor-husband, Melvyn Douglas, who came to Washington with her; her favorite poet, Ernest Dowson; her Barnard College days, and opera and radio—before it finally got around to the theater and her role in "And Stars Remain," playing here this week.

Tall and willowy, the actress made a pretty picture as she curled up on a couch in her suite at the Hay-Adams House and became philosophical about how to get the most out of one's career, whatever it may be. She wore white silk lounging pajamas, fashioned on Oriental lines and finished off with narrow bands of cerise and lilac that contrasted nicely with her blue eyes and brown bobbed hair.

She believes finding not one medium of expression, but many, is essential to success in any field of creative endeavor.

"I mean by that," she explained, "a well-rounded artist must know something about many lines of self-expression before he can be a finished exponent of his favorite one. A musician who has had some experience as an actor is a better musician; a writer who can paint, or sing, or act is a better writer. All branches of creative art are so closely allied, it doesn't pay to concentrate on one to the exclusion of all others. You can't be tops in more than one at a time, but what you know about the others will be of material help in your speciality."

She believes success is the result of having a definite goal, plus some talent, some luck and plenty of hard work. When she was 5, she decided to be an actress after appearing in a school play. There were a number of public speakers among her forebears, but none of her family was of the theater.

"My mother was a singer, and both my parents wanted me to have a career in opera," she said. "I was determined to go on the stage."

As a result, she tackled both careers, stepped into her first professional role when she was a sophomore at Barnard College, became a Broadway star in a number of plays and then toured Europe in opera.

Meanwhile, she had studied dancing and sculpture, had married and had become interested in motion pictures. Last year she made her screen debut in H. Rider Haggard's "She." This year she is back on the legitimate stage—which still represents her greatest ambition—looking forward to "being back on Broadway."

Her wide range of interests outside her home leaves her little time for purely domestic pursuits, but like any other mother, she will dilate on the sayings and doings of her boy as long as you wish. And, when pressed, she will tell you she designs most of her own clothes—not because she likes to, but "because I detest wearing dresses like every other woman. I want mine to have a different touch somewhere. I have found they never do unless I plan them myself."

Chest Ballots, Blind Institute Omitted for '37

All member agencies of the Community Chest, with the exception of Columbia Polytechnic Institute for the Blind, were re-elected to membership for 1937 at a meeting of the Chest board of trustees, held yesterday afternoon in the United States Chamber of Commerce Building. The Federation of Parent-Teacher Association's shoe and rubber fund was elected to membership.

Elimination of the Columbia Polytechnic Institute for the Blind from the list of Chest agencies for 1937 was due, according to Chest officials, to internal dissensions among the Institute's board of trustees, and a feeling that its work, through money supplied by the Chest, is inadequately meeting the needs of the blind in the District of Columbia.

Study Urged.

At the same time the trustees adopted a resolution calling on the council of social agencies to conduct a study of the blind situation, to determine what can best be done to meet this need and what part the Chest shall play in relieving it.

President Clarence Phelps Dodge, in his report, stressed the fact that the member hospitals of the Chest are not being paid in full for services rendered to patients properly certified to them by the central admitting bureau.

"For 1935," Dodge said, "the Chest was unable to pay $23,000 of just claims, although a total of $276,000, the amount appropriated for this purpose, was paid. With the same appropriation for 1936, it appears that this underpayment will be approximately $70,000.

"The hospitals," he continued, "are intensely concerned in this matter because it increases their deficits. An urgent request has, therefore, been made for a much larger sum in 1937."

Gets Legacy.

Dodge also reported that the Chest has been informed by Louis Ottenberg, one of the executors of the will of the late Harry B. Willson, that it is one of two residuary legatees which, after a period of about four years necessary to put the will in effect, will become owners of a large apartment house with an income of approximately $10,000 a year each.

Coleman Jennings, campaign chairman, reported that each of his campaign units is making rapid progress in organization for the campaign this fall, which will be held November 12-24 inclusive.

Revision of the by-laws of the Chest, directed by a committee headed by John F. Victory, was held over for further study and a vote at the next meeting of the board.

$16 in Gifts Swell Maxwell Aid Fund

Contributions yesterday to The Post's fund to aid in financing Edith Maxwell's new trial for the slaying of her father totaled $16.

Kent B. Keene, $1; Anonymous, $10, and K. S. M., $5.

This, added to money previously reported, brings the total contributed by readers of The Post since the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals set aside the conviction of the mountain school teacher to $188.64.

After Edith's conviction almost a year ago, The Post secured more than $1,000 from persons who believed that she was innocent of her father's death. This money was used in financing her successful appeal, which was handled by Charles Henry Smith, Alexandria attorney, who gave his services at The Post's request.

Plan to Use Pools For Play Offered

The public swimming pools of Washington will be boarded over for nine months of the year and converted into play areas so that badminton, volley ball and other games may be played when bathing is out of season, if plans considered yesterday by the co-ordinating plans committee of the District recreation committee mature.

Heading the plans committee is Lewis R. Barrett, the District's co-ordinator of recreation, who has asked the National Parks Service for more information about the project, including costs.

Preliminary sketches yesterday were presented by Malcolm Kirkpatrick, resident landscape architect attached to the National Capital Parks. These showed how pool areas such as Banneker, Takoma and McKinley might be converted through the use of temporary platforms.

Soldier Killed In Arlington Bridge Crash

Sergt. Roy F. Miller, 28, of the machine-gun troop, Third Cavalry, at Fort Myer, Va., was killed instantly late last night when his automobile overturned on Memorial avenue between Little River and Arlington Memorial bridges.

A companion, Miss Ethel Richards, 27, of 2602 Pershing drive, Lyon Park, was injured critically. Physicians at Emergency Hospital said she had a possible skull fracture and severe cuts and bruises.

A third person, the driver, Corp. Harry Kershner, suffered a wrenched back, shock and severe cuts of his scalp. He was taken to Emergency Hospital, where physicians said his condition was not serious.

Sergt. Miller, a track exhibition rider, who had been at Fort Myer for the past nine years, was pronounced dead on arrival at Emergency Hospital.

Police learned the automobile was traveling at a rapid rate when it struck a depression in the road, spun beyond control and overturned five times.

A native of Hagerstown, Md., Miller enlisted in the Army at the age of 19. He was a leader in the celebrated Fort Myer monkey drill.

Col. J. M. Wainwright, commanding the Third Cavalry, and Capt. Donald H. Galloway, Miller's commanding officer, personally were investigating the crash last night.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Kahler, of 1319 Park road northwest, were treated for cuts and bruises at Garfield Hospital yesterday after their automobile collided with a car operated, police said, by Miss Rose Wassermann, 25, of 5204 Fourth street northwest.

Kahlers' Car Overturns.

The accident occurred at Fourth and Jefferson streets northwest, and the impact of the crash overturned the Kahlers' car. Miss Wassermann was arrested, charged with leaving the scene of the accident.

Two boys on a bicycle suffered fractured skulls yesterday when they collided with a street car operated by Floyd Little, 35, of the 200 block of C street northwest.

The victims were Steve Orsini, 15, of 328 H street northeast, and Allen Laube, 12, of 412 I street northwest. Police said Laube was riding the handle bars and Orsini pedaling. Both were taken to Emergency Hospital, where physicians said their condition was serious.

Gertrude Matthews, 18, of the 100 block of F street northwest, suffered a fractured skull late yesterday when she fell from an automobile in which she was riding with Wyatt Morgan, 22, of the 600 block of Twelfth street northeast. She was taken to Casualty Hospital.

Hearst Sticker Case Dismissed

D. N. Shoemaker, 6800 Eastern avenue, yesterday asked the District Court to restrain the Postoffice Department from refusing to handle a letter to which he had attached a sticker with the legend "I Don't Read Hearst."

Justice Joseph W. Cox refused the injunction on grounds that the stickers violated postal regulations by "obviously intending to reflect injuriously upon the conduct or character of another."

Shoemaker posted a letter bearing such a sticker in August. The Postoffice Department returned the letter with a notation that the sticker made the letter objectionable matter.

Ekins in Burma To Hop at Dawn For Singapore

Leader in World Race Is 4,500 Miles Ahead of Two Rivals.

By the United Press.

Rangoon, Burma (Thursday), Oct. 8.—A big, silver Douglas monoplane of the KLM-Royal Dutch Air Lines was poised at the Mingaladon Airport here early today ready to take off at dawn with H. R. Ekins—leader in an around-the-world air race between three New York newspaper writers.

The plane, on the regular air mail and passenger schedule of the KLM lines, will fly 1,532 miles to Singapore, straits settlement, today, putting the New York World-Telegram Scripps-Howard racer some 4,500 miles ahead of his rivals—Dorothy Kilgallen, of the New York Journal-International News Service, and Leo Kieran, of the New York Times-Nana Service.

Kieran and Miss Kilgallen were at Baghdad, more than two days flying time behind the leader. They are on a regular Europe-to-Asia plane—the Hengist—of the British Imperial Airways and reached Baghdad from Alexandria at dusk yesterday. Their schedule calls for a flight today from Baghdad to the Sharjah Airport on the Gulf of Oman.

It still was possible, however, that Miss Kilgallen and Kieran will reach Hongkong in time to catch the Dollar Steamship Co.'s President Pierce for Manila and thus make the vital connection with a transpacific plane there.

Townsend Asks Followers Back Landon in West

California Poll Reveals 62 Per Cent of Party Favor Kansan.

By the Associated Press.

San Francisco, Oct. 7.—Edward J. Margett, California State Townsend director, said he had received a telegraphic message today from Dr. Francis E. Townsend calling upon the California Townsend organization to support Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas, Republican Presidential nominee.

Margett said the message was dispatched after Dr. Townsend had been advised a State-wide membership vote disclosed 62 per cent of the Townsendites favor Landon.

Townsend's message, in part, stated:

"Not being permitted to vote for Mr. Lemke (the Union Party candidate) as my choice for the Presidency, I shall cast my vote for an untried man—Mr Landon—in the hope that he may prove of greater value to the Nation than the gentleman who has occupied the White House for the last four years."

U. S. Army Cut Held Safe Move At Peace Parley

75,000 Men Ample to Defend Shores, Says Speaker; Group Meets Today.

This country needs a standing Army of only 75,000 men and a Navy half its present size to defend our shores, Mauritz Hallgren, of the Baltimore Sun, yesterday told the ninth annual meeting of the National Council for the Prevention of War.

Hallgren gave a statistical and technical analysis gathered from Government sources to prove that this country would be safe from foreign invasion with half our armaments. He claims our present Army and Navy are built, not for defense, but for aggression.

He was one of the six speakers at the opening session of the annual meeting. They presented the outlines of the six-fold legislative program which the council will present to the coming session of Congress. Representatives of labor, farmers, women's groups, the churches and colleges are here for the sessions being held at Lee House.

Factions Wrangle.

The session last nigh was devoted to discussion of the legislative program. The pacifists and realists locked horns on most of the issues and the only decision reached was on a neutrality plank. This called for strengthening existing legislation by placing embargoes in time of war on other than strictly munitions articles.

At the morning session Hallgren pointed out that a flotilla of 552 ships would be needed to transport an enemy force of 300,000 men across either ocean. The flotilla he said could only average 10 knots an hour and would take 26 days to reach our shores.

When it got here it would be faced with the impossible problem, he added, of landing in our heavily fortified harbors. The problem which would then confront it would be that of feednig such an army with an ocean-long line of communications behind it.

But that's getting too deeply into arithmetic. So, returning to the three tasters—incidentally, Barbella was drafted for emergency service yesterday when someone failed to appear—they are found putting down the score on their seventh dish.

All have separate score cards. After each plate is consumed, the judge checks such points as the aroma, texture, flavors of both fat and lean, tenderness and the quality and quantity of juice. In each classification he must decide whether the meat stacks up as intense, desirable, tough, very tough, tender, dry, neutral, etc.

Ancient Relics Link Eskimos To Tribes of 1,000 Years Ago

Eskimo armor, worn in Alaskan battles 1,000 years ago, and weapons, tools and household articles that add greatly to knowledge of life in the Far North before the dawn of history in the Western Hemisphere, have been unearthed by a joint expedition of the National Geographic Society and the Smithsonian Institution.

Preserved for many centuries in perpetually frozen soil, the relics furnish valuable new knowledge of two ancient Eskimo cultures or primitive "civilizations" of Alaska, and fill important gaps in the history of the ancestors of the modern Eskimo.

The remains were excavated during the past summer by the National Geographic Society — Smithsonian Institution archeological expedition to the Bering Sea, under the leadership of Henry B. Collins, jr., of the Smithsonian. Assisting him were James A. Ford, of Louisiana State University, and Harrison Prindle, of this city. The expedition has just returned to Washington.

Armor of Bone.

The armor which the expedition uncovered was made of slats of bone, similar to slat armor used by some Asiatic tribes. Other finds included harpoon and arrow heads, fish lines of flexible whale bone, fragments of clothing, cooking utensils, combs, awls, needles, ceremonial masks and even toys carved in exact imitation of full-sized boats, animals, etc.

Working at and near Cape Prince of Wales, westernmost point of the North American Continent, the expedition excavated mounds of prehistoric rubbish accumulated over long periods from villages long since abandoned. One of the mounds was 8 feet deep, and digging was a slow process because the frozen ground thawed only a few inches each day.

The archeologists uncovered the first site of the old Eskimo "Thule culture" ever found in Alaska. The "Thule culture" was the stage of development attained by the Eskimos previous to the stage they had reached when found by the first white explorers, and is characterized by certain types of tools, weapons and art objects.

Culture Widespread.

The Thule culture spread all over Arctic North America and even to Greenland. While it has been known to exist in those regions for some time, the new finds confirm the important fact that it spread eastward from Alaska. These proofs were found in a mound located previously by Dr. Diamond Jenness, of the National Museum of Canada, who made the first systematic excavations in Arctic Alaska.

In the same mound the expedition found evidence the Thule culture was derived from a still earlier one known as the Birnirk culture, which once flourished in the region of Point Barrow. In successive layers downward in the mound, harpoon heads gradually changed from the Thule style to that of the Birnirk type. This establishes continuity between the two cultures and closes a gap that previously existed between them.

Two miles from this location the archeologists found another older mound in which the remains were entirely of the Birnirk type. This was the first discovery of a site of the "Birnirk culture" outside the Point Barrow region. In other mounds the expedition found remains of more recent times, and thus was able to piece together a complete picture of Eskimo development in that locality over many centuries.

Surveyed Coast.

In addition, Ford made an archeological survey along the north Alaskan coast between Kotzebue and Point Barrow, northernmost settlement under the American flag. This trip of almost 400 miles was made in the large walrus-hide Eskimo boats or umiaks, which are 25 to 30 feet in length and can carry as much as three tons of cargo. Relics dug up by the expedition show that these boats are little different from those used 1,000 years ago by the Eskimos, but the modern ones are powered by outboard motors, clamped to the driftwood frame.

Cape Prince of Wales, the expedition's headquarters, extends to within 56 miles of Siberia, and is a strategic point for excavating prehistoric remains because it was on the logical migration route of the ancient Eskimos back and forth between Siberia and Alaska. Most scientists are convinced that North America originally was peopled by migrations over this route from Asia.

The expedition made a careful but unsuccessful search for remains of pre-Eskimo people, who probably used this same migration route and drifted south, it is thought, to become ancestors of the American Indian.

Look what's just happened to the price of fine American whiskey

PERHAPS you are one of those numerous people who have said, "I'd like to use Mount Vernon but—the difference in price is too much."

Well, that difference is now erased.

This distinguished straight rye whiskey—bottled in bond under U. S. Government supervision—is now reduced in price, in accordance with the pledge of National Distillers that as its fine whiskey stocks go up, its prices go down.

To be specific, the reduction averages around 16% for quarts, pints, half pints.

Commerce Department figures yesterday backed up the complaint of Gov. Alf M. Landon against big increases in the importation of cheese since adoption of reciprocal trade agreements.

The import figures for August show that a total of 6,452,220 pounds of cheese were shipped into this country during that month, compared with 3,647,425 pounds during August of last year. During the first eight months of this year cheese imports totaled 36,267,961 pounds, compared with 30,383,781 pounds during the corresponding period last year.

The figures also showed a sharp increase in imports of wheat, pork and potatoes. The aggregate importation for foodstuffs, however, showed a decline of 11.5 per cent under August of last year. This was accounted for largely by declines in the importation of corn, cane sugar and cocoanut oil.

During August of this year the United States imported 6,003,392 bushels of wheat, compared with 3,615,533 bushels in August, 1935. During the first eight months of the year wheat imports were 28,473,222 bushels, compared with 17,202,483 bushels during a similar period last year.

White Potatoes Take Jump.

Importation of white potatoes took an even bigger jump. In August the United States imported 748,834 bushels, compared with 24,802 bushels in August, 1935. This country imported 49,790,424 bushels during the first eight months of 1936, and 18,081,147 bushels during the first eight months of last year.

Fresh pork imports were 1,125,857 pounds in August, 1936, and 591,458 pounds in August, 1936. During the first eight months this year they were 8,099,769 pounds, and in the first eight months last year they were 2,645,928 pounds. Preserved pork showed a similar increase; 2,217,944 pounds in August, 1936, and 705,403 pounds in August, 1935. For the eight-month period the figure was 15,013,915 pounds this year and 2,440,046 pounds last year.

One of the biggest drops in the food import list was shown by corn. In August of this year the United States imported 1,549,035 bushels, compared with 8,553,812 bushels in August last year. For the first eight months this year corn imports were 8,512,346 bushels, compared with 31,822,886 bushels for the corresponding period last year.

While cane sugar importations dropped sharply in August, the total for the eight-month period was about the same as last year.

Babassu Nut Importation.

While the Commerce Department gave figures on the importation of babassu nuts, another product mentioned by Landon, it gave no figures for last year, noting that this product was not listed separately then. The nuts are used in the manufacture of oleomargarine and lard substitutes. The United States during the first eight months of this year imported 46,289,881 pounds of the nuts.

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States, also noting increased exports, said the largest increases during the first six months of this year were in wood pulp, newsprint, lumber, diamonds, tin, nickel, manganese ore, textile manufactures, liquors, furs, wool, cotton, rubber, silk, sisal, jute, sugar, inedible vegetable oils, hides, skin, tobacco, wheat and cattle.

Meanwhile, Secretary Roper, at a press conference, declared that business activity and employment in this country are at the best levels of the recovery period. He said industrial production during the third quarter of the year was one-fifth larger than during the corresponding quarter last year and that it was about one-tenth below the 1929 average. Roper pointed particularly to the increased demand for steel, growing electrical power production, the prosperity of the automobile business and the increase in railroad travel.

Building Trend Upward.

The failure of the usual seasonal slump in the building industry, he said, indicates that the trend is still definitely upward.

"The year 1936 will find the railroads well along on their way back to a profitable operating basis," he said. "Freight and passenger traffic have improved to a point where more than 100,000 employes have been added to the pay rolls since 1933. This improvement has been reflected in the increasing volume of business going to the rail equipment and other durable goods industries.

"Preliminary trends for August show that the deficit in the early months was wiped out and now the railroads are in the net-income column for the first eight months of the year. This indicates that class 1 railroads will earn a net income for 1936 for the first time since 1931.

"Freight-car loadings for the fourth quarter of 1936 are expected to be 9.7 per cent above actual loadings in the same quarter of 1935, according to the regional advisory board's estimates."

Scottsboro Decision Voids Murder Cases

Charlotte, N. C., Oct. 7 (AP).—The Scottsboro decision of the United States Supreme Court threw a monkey wrench today into the proceedings of Mecklenburg Superior Court.

Judge J. Will Pless, jr., ruled the county jury was illegally constituted because Negroes were not represented in its membership.

As a result, murder indictments against two Negroes said by police to have confessed the holdup slaying of a Charlotte taxi driver last week, and another indictment charging a young Negro with the capital crime of burglary, were quashed.

Hitler Honors Goemboes.

Social Security Bill Was Sent to Congress Over Protests Of the President's Advisory Committee, Records Show the many inspired men and women who helped frame the measure and gave the law their warm approval before it passed."

The record reveals that these "inspired men and women" fought to build that social legislation on different lines, without effect on the Administration's program.

The history of the social security act is as follows:

The President gave the idea of social security a great impetus by one of his happiest speeches on June 8, 1934. On June 29 he appointed a committee on economic security to recommend a legislative program by appointing Secretary of Labor Perkins, chairman; Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, Attorney General Cummings, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and Harry L. Hopkins, Federal emergency relief administrator—mostly Cabinet members, having no previous experience with the question unless Secretary Perkins is excepted, and all of them already burdened with other duties.

This committee then chose a technical board on economic security. In addition, an advisory council on economic security was appointed, representing employers, employes and a group of consultants.

Council Ignored.

The Cabinet committee, as the Senate hearings from January 21 to February 12, 1935, indicate, ignored the advisory council, rejecting every bit of advice this group offered.

Practically all of the names which Senator Wagner and Gov. Winant mentioned as supporting the tax-credit device which is embodied in the present act—William Green, Gerard Swope, Walter Teagle, Mgr. John A. Ryan, Barbara Armstrong and Frank P. Graham—made public statements during the Congressional hearings in which they expressed strong condemnation of this and other phases of the present law. The Congressional Record also indicates that in spite of the opposition of the President's advisory committee the bill was rushed through Congress with inadequate debate and with the frank confession on the part of Representative Samuel B. Hill that "it was difficult for the members generally to find the time to study the bill closely."

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America; William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, and Prof. Barbara N. Armstrong, of the University of California, whose names were mentioned as supporters of the bill, were members of a large group of economists, labor leaders and university professors who sent the Congressional committee a statement sharply criticizing the tax-credit device, a major provision of the social securities act, and urging the adoption of the subsidy plan in its place.

Signed by Committee.

This statement, in addition, was signed by Profs. Paul Brissenden and Carter Goodrich, of Columbia University, and Douglas Brown, of Princeton, staff members of the Committee on Economic Security, as well as by many other staff experts on unemployment insurance who were members of the President's Committee on Economic Security, among them Paul Kellogg, editor of the Survey, and Abraham Epstein, former secretary of the American Association for Social Security.

This statement pointed out in no uncertain terms the shortcomings of the Wagner-Lewis bill, and especially of the tax-credit plan on which it is based, as contrasted with the subsidy plan that most of the President's advisers preferred. Some of the criticism leveled at the present security act by this group of experts was as follows:

"(1) Under the tax-credit plan, insistence upon essential standards is impossible because of constitutional limitations.

"(2) The tax-credit plan will produce a multiplicity of diverse and unco-ordinated State programs.

"(3) The tax-credit device involves the duplication of tax collection machinery in each of the States, with resulting dual accounts and records.

Collection Requirement.

(5) The requirement in the pending bill that the States turn over to the Federal Treasury the contributions which they collect within their own borders encounters constitutional barriers in some States which will make it impossible for them to comply."

Concerning the tax-credit device which Senator Wagner and Gov. Winant cited Green as favoring, he had this to say in the Senate hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives on pages 155-156 of the Senate hearings:

"Labor favors a national unemployment insurance measure. Since such a national measure apparently cannot be adopted under our Constitution, the grant-in-aid or subsidy plan comes closest to fulfilling the desires of labor. The question of the grant-in-aid plan or the rebate credit plan, as proposed by the Wagner bill, were thoroughly discussed by the advisory committee. It was gone into exhausively, and the committee by a vote of 9 to 7, I think if was, finally decided to favor the grant-in-aid plan, and that was the recommendation of the advisory committee to the economic security committee, composed of the Cabinet members. So that the advisory council appointed by the President, by a decisive majority, after an exhaustive discussion and examination of all of the facts, decided in favor of the grant-in-aid plan."

Substitution Urged.

After an exhaustive argument as to the superiority of this plan to the tax-credit plan finally forced through Congress, Green concludes his case by stating categorically "I urge, then, that the grants-in-aid or subsidy plan be substituted for the present measure."

Frank P. Graham, president of the University of North Carolina, who also is credited by Gov. Winant and Senator Wagner as being in favor of the present bill, was equally emphatic in his testimony against it:

"The fundamental position upneld by the majority is that the grant-in-aid plan is more adaptable to our economic life and to the needs of both industry and the workers. The grant-in-aid plan appears not only the stronger constitutionally, but it is also a variation and development of Federal grants-in-aid which are historically established part of our Federal-State structure. Finally, we believe that the grant-in-aid plan can better provide for essential minimum standards in the interests of the fund, the employers and the employes."

Condemned by Kellogg.

As Senator Wagner and Gov. Winant did not venture to cite Paul Kellogg, vice chairman of the council, as supporting the social security act in its present form, it may have been because of the following harsh condemnation:

"The rights of workers out of work should be the very heart of unemployment compensation legislation. * * * To leave them out is a violent breach of the principle of national responsibility toward unemployment which the 'New Deal' has stood for.

"To turn back the Federal pay roll tax to the States without setting the standards below which no State shall go is to make a hollow shell of the protection for which the money is collected. * * *

"In leaving these national standards out of the Administration program, the committee on economic security and the Wagner-Lewis bill not only broke with the majority recommendations of the advisory council, but with those of outstanding experts on unemployment insurance. * * *

"There is significance in such a banked demand, worth weighing against the loose proposal of the Administration to provide merely that the States must spend the money raised on unemployment benefits." * * *

Different Solution.

These arguments were overruled not only by the Cabinet committee, but also by the Congressional committee. Not only did the men cited by Senator Wagner and Gov. Winant present a totally different solution of the unemployment insurance problem, but their critiqisms of the bill as finally passed were completely ignored by the President, by his Cabinet committee, and perhaps for that reason by Congress itself. The subsidy device after thorough debate was preferred by 9 of the 16 members of the advisory council who were present at the final vote on this question.

Among the members of the advisory council who preferred this plan to the original bill, were the employer members, including Gerard Swope, Walter C. Teagle, Marion B. Folsom, William Green, Frank P. Graham and Paul Kellogg, all of whom now are mentioned by Senator Wagner and Gov. Winant as being in favor of the bill as it stands.

In fact, the only support which the bill received during the hearings was from a few members of the technical board taken from Government departments unrelated to the question, but even these, although allowing themselves to go on record as recommending the tax-credit plan of the security act, acknowledged the superiority of the subsidy system which the President and his Cabinet committee rejected.

Assailed by Burns.

Prof. Eveline M. Burns, of Columbia University, told the committee that the adoption of the tax-credit plan as now embodied in the bill might postpone the institution of satisfactory employment insurance for many years. This phase of the Wagner-Lewis bill, Prof. Burns stated, "will not bring about unemployment insurance to any significant extent," and pointing to the superiority of the rejected system, Prof. Burns said: "It is difficult to see why the committee adopted the clumsy and ineffective Wagner-Lewis principle in place of the more convenient method of the Federal subsidy, which was, in fact, recommended to the committee by its own advisory council and by the experts as the next best thing to a national scheme."

Green, it appears, also was emphatic in his opposition to the article in the act which permitted States to set up individual plant reserves and supported instead a plan whereby the State funds should be pooled. He also pointed out the inadequacy of the 3 per cent pay roll tax, a salient feature of the present act, and showed that "even in time of prosperity 54 per cent of the unemployed wage earners would fall outside the period provided during which benefits could be paid under a 3 per cent tax" and that "in times of depression or extended unemployment, as high as 80 per cent of the unemployed wage earners would fall outside the benefit period, while in average times 60 per cent would be outside."

British System Cited.

In this statement, which is recorded on pages 171-174 of the Congressional hearings, Green took pains to point out that "the British system of unemployment insurance has now been in effect for 24 years. I believe that their experience should be used by us in every way possible. If England has been able to maintain all through the post-war depression a coverage such as it has maintained, and which it is even now liberalizing, surely the United States cannot be content with the meager coverage proposed by the present bill."

Although similar arguments were presented by many other outstanding students of the problem, the Cabinet committee proceeded with the original bill embodying the credit-tax plan, permitting individual reserves in State plans, and keeping the maximum tax at 3 per cent of total pay rolls, all of them features opposed by the men whom Senator Wagner and Gov. Winant now quote as enthusiastic supporters of the social security act.

When the bill finally was introduced in Congress on January 17, 1935, by Senator Robert E. Wagner and Representatives Doughton and Lewis, it represented conclusions or recommendations of the Committee on Economic Security, none of them experts on economic security. According to the records, only the official spokesmen were given an opportunity to explain the bill. More than half of the testimony in both houses as recorded in the Congressional hearings was given by Administration leaders.

The House Ways and Means Committee limited all outside witnesses to 5 minutes, in one instance forcibly ejecting a witness attempting to conclude his testimony.

Bill Was Redrawn.

The House committee also was obliged to order its own draftsman to make the bill more intelligible, as the bill was so badly drawn that it was impossible to proceed with the bill as originally drafted. The House committee accepted the Cabinet committee tax-credit plan over the protests of the witnesses whom Senator Wagner now mentions as supporters of the bill. The most startling alteration made by the House Ways and Means Committee and one concerning which the advisory committee was never asked its opinion, was the substitution "in the contributory old-age annuity system of a scale of contributory taxes and benefit payments that will facilitate the continued operation of the system on an adequate and sound financial basis, without imposing heavy burdens on future generations."

This important measure was introduced by Secretary Morgenthau on February 5, although Morgenthau, as a member of the Cabinet committee on economic security, had signed the final recommendations to the President as recently as January 15. Thus it appears that one of the major provisions of the bill was introduced at the last moment without the concurrence of any of the President's advisers.

By these provisions the aim of providing for the aged is converted into a financial scheme for replacing the outstanding public debt. The burden of meeting the heavy immediate payments for old-age dependencies is placed largely upon the shoulders of the young, an obvious injustice which is now meeting with the severest criticism. The House Ways and Means Committee immediately substituted the suggestions of the Secretary of the Treasury, and presumably of the President, for the original recommendations of the advisory committee.

Contribution by President.

Thus the bill in its final form and especially in some of its most vulnerable aspects is obviously a contribution by the President and not of his advisors, a fact that Senator Wagner and Gov. Winant did not make clear in their public statements of last week.

It is this measure for which the President, and his Secretary of the Treasury are responsible, which would heap up the enormous reserves in the Treasury, a provision which Gov. Landon pointed out only last week as one of the most dangerous aspects of the security bill.

Senator Wagner and Gov. Winant mentioned as an argument on behalf of the security act the fact that 448 members of Congress had voted for this law.

The record is that members of Congress were so confused that Representative Hill assured them on the floor that it was no reflection upon any member of Congress if he did not find time to study the bill or understand the details of the legislation. He stated in part, "I want to confess it is difficult for the members of the Ways and Means Committee, who have studied it for weeks and weeks, to get the full purport and understanding of all its provisions and ramifications."

Little Debate on Plan.

A study of the Congressional Record reveals that during the five days of discussion in the Senate scarcely a column of debate can be found on this revolutionary economic plan aside from the explanation given by the sponsors of the bill. The old-age insurance plan with its far-reaching innovations in our social life was not given more than a page of discussion. When Senator Clark wished to offer an amendment, the constitutionality of which was feared by some of the members of the Senate, Senator Clark stated:

"The constitutionality of the proposed act is already so doubtful that it would seem to me to be a work of supererogation to bring up the question of constitutionality in regard to the pending amendment."

The large vote of approval which the security act received from Congress might not be considered by some as a recommendation for the act in view of the statements by Mr. Hill and Mr. Clark.

Old Settlers Seek Memorial Fund, Recall Patent Fire

The Association of Oldest Inhabitants last night voted to ask Congress for a District appropriation to provide for memorials to William W. Corcoran and Charles C. Glover, two former members of the association whom James Duhamel, framer of the resoution, called the city's leading benefactors.

A lengthy discussion was held on the fire at the Patent Office in 1877. About half the members present recalled the blaze and told how they left school or work to assist the firemen.

Frank T. DeNeale said that he was at that time conductor of a Ninth street street car. He was unable to get his car past the scene, he said, and had to call laborers, who lifted the 10-foot car from the tracks and turned it around. By the time he finally got his car turned around, the heat from the fire had badly scorched the side of the vehicle.

Zephir Breaks Sea Mark.

New York, Oct. 7 (AP).—The German flying boat Zephir arrived at Port Washington, Long Island, at 8:40 a. m. (E. S. T.) today, completing the last of a series of test flights from the Azores, in 18 hours and 20 minutes. It was the best time made by either the Zephir or the Aeolus, a sister ship, in their flights across the Atlantic.

Senate Group Launches WPA Relief Inquiry

The relief was continued yesterday as the Senate Campaign Expenditures Committee sent three additional investigators into Pennsylvania to look into charges of political corruption in the Works Progress Administration.

William Hard, Republican National Committee radio commentator, continued last night to read affidavits to back up the committee's charge of corruption. At the same time, he insisted the Department of Justice had "co-operated in clamping down the lid on one WPA investigation" in Pennsylvania.

Harry L. Hopkins, in a statement, repeated his contention that cost records of the WPA were available for anyone having a "legitimate reason" to see them. He also denied charges of Pennsylvania corruption. Hopkins will go on the air tonight with a talk on "Dollars and Sense." He will speak under the auspices of Labor's Non-Partisan League, the Progressive National Committee and the Good Neighbor League.

Investigation Under Way.

Senator Lonergan (Democrat), Connecticut, chairman of the Senate investigating committee, revealed that the Pennsylvania investigation had started at the beginning of the week. The investigation is based upon charges made by Senator Davis (Republican), Pennsylvania.

Hard, in his radio broadcast, continued to insist that the Senate committee hold hearings in the Keystone State. His affidavits charged that WPA workers had been coerced into making contributions to Democratic funds and into subscribing for a political newspaper published by Edward N. Jones, State WPA administrator.

In reference to a previous suggestion of Senator Lonergan, that charges be turned over to the Department of Justice, Hard charged that a representative of the department had instructed witnesses not to answer questions at an investigation last spring by a committee of the Pennsylvania Legislature

Hopkins, in a statement concerning the request from Kansas for WPA records, said that "our records have always been open to the public and will continue to be."

"Touched Sore Spot."

"I explained only recently that these records as to administrative costs were available to anyone having a legitimate reason for seeking them," he continued. "The cry raised in certain quarters over the word 'legitimate' suggests that this touched a sort spot."

In reference to the affidavits being produced by the Republican organization, Hopkins said:

"It is amazing to me that the Republican National Committee will permit Joe Grundy's henchmen in Pennsylvania to peddle their phony affidavits and second-hand gossip, which is then palmed off on the American people as news. The answers of our State Administrator in Pennsylvania to these politically inspired charges are a complete refutation of the Republican committee's mud slinging."

Hopkins denied all of the charges made by Hard over the radio Tuesday night. In reference to the employment of a Democratic committeeman by the WPA, he said.

"The Republican speaker might be surprised to learn that there are Republican committeemen employed on WPA in Philadelphia."

Sense of Smell Lost, Two Ask $50,000

Keene, N. H., Oct. 7 (AP).—Testimony was begun today in the suit of two Walpole men who seek damages of $25,000 each for loss of their sense of smell. J. Ernest Green, jr., and Robert Barrett claim fumes they came in contact with while employed at the Colgate Gilbert Electraplating plant destroyed membranes in their nasal passages and affected the lining of their throats.

Gloria's Mother Gets Legacy of $100,000

New York, Oct. 7 (AP).—Surrogate James A. Foley today directed Cornelius Vanderbilt and Gertrude Vanderbilt Whitney, executors of the estate of Mrs. Alice Gwynne Vanderbilt, to pay Mrs. Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt the $100,000 legacy left to her by her mother-in-law.

The order, signed by Surrogate Foley, also directed the payment of interest from December 29, 1934, at the rate of 3.9 per cent, the amount earned by the estate, less $30,000 to be paid the Guaranty Trust Co. The trust company payments covers two loans made to Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt.

Mrs. Vanderbilt put up the legacy as collateral when she borrowed money to pay for her unsuccessful fight against Mrs. Gertrude Whitney for custody of her daughter, Gloria.

of the assassination of Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss, was "never satisfactorily explained." Fey sent his second to his arch rival demanding an opportunity to vindicate his honor.

Coincidently, the tension between the rival Heimwehr factions—growing out of Starhemberg's order expelling Fey from the organization and Fey's defiant counter-move announcing he would seize control of the Vienna Heimwehr—led to reports the cabinet tonight was considering drastic steps.

Police, armed with rifles, guarded the Heimwehr barracks, and it was believed in some quarters that the government was considering disarming all Heimwehrmen to prevent possible clashes.

New Car Hearings Urged by Citizens

The Friendship Citizens Association, meeting last night at Janney School, indorsed action of the Federation of Citizens Associations in asking for a renewal of the one-man car hearings.

The association also voted to ask the Commissioners to include a $135,000 item in the budget to provide for the construction of a branch library near Janney School.

A resolution was adopted opposing any increase in the real estate tax, while the association also went on record as against a weight tax on automobiles or any increase in the gasoline tax. S. J. Flickinger and C. D. Franks were elected delegates to the federation.

HAPPY RELIEF FROM PAINFUL BACKACHE

Caused by Tired Kidneys

Many of those gnawing, nagging, painful backaches people blame on colds or strains are often caused by tired kidneys—and may be relieved when treated in the right way.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. Most people pass about 3 pints a day or about 3 pounds of waste.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may start nagging backaches, rheumatic pains, lumbago, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from the blood. Get Doan's Pills.

nations which agreed to keep hands off Spain, the whole Spanish "hot potato" may be hurled back into the hands of the individual governments, to be juggled in the best way possible, observers asserted.

The whole non-intervention scheme has been recognized generally as ineffective from the beginning because of Portugal's absence. Many persons have expressed wonder why Russia, naturally sympathetic to the People's Front regime at Madrid, delayed as long as it did.

It was believed the British Foreign Office undoubtedly was irked at Russia's publicity airing its views prior to the private committee meetings.

Confession Seen.

Rome, Oct. 7 (U.P.).—The Soviet note regarding Spanish intervention was received here too late for official comment, but informed persons professed to interpret it as an implicit confession Madrid's condition was getting more precarious.

The Russian note was described as a last-minute effort to prevent collapse of the Socialist-Communist Spanish government. Observers, however, were convinced Russia was "bluffing" and did not intend to carry out implications of the note, since active intervention in Spain would land Europe again in a critical situation similar to that at the outbreak of the Spanish struggle.

It was argued also that France and Great Britain would not permit Russia to menace the equilibrium of Europe at the precise moment all Europe was striving to maintain it.

Shakespeare Unit Will Open Season

The Shakespeare Society of Washington opens its twentieth season at 8:15 p. m. tomorrow with a presentation of some of Shakespeare's soliloquies in the Universalist Church, Sixteenth and S street northwest.

At this, the two hundred and forty-fifth regular program, Prof. Marvin T. Herrick, of George Washington University, will discuss the use of soliloquies in dramas of the Elizabethan era. His lecture will be followed by readings of a dozen soliloquies from Shakespeare plays by Maurice Jarvis, Ada Townsend, W. E. Bryant, Esther Marshman and Joseph Haltigan.

Six of Shakespeare's plays will be dramatized by the group later in the season, which runs from October until May. A play, "The Beau Stratagem," by George Farquhar, and vocal and instrumental rendition of Elizabethan lyrics also will be presented.

Human Fly Carries Little Daughter Up Courthouse Walls

"Daredevil" Johnny Woods, widely known along the Eastern Seaboard for his aerial feats, yesterday climbed the face of Montgomery County courthouse, carrying his 28-month-old daughter with him.

Later as a crowd of 500 Rockville citizens gaped, the little girl clutched her father around the chest and her mother held him around the waist and hung head downward over the side of the structure.

The family then traveled along the edge of the parapet, etched against the October sky. Johnnie later provided a few more thrills by hanging from the top of the courthouse on a rubber inner tube, and then by standing on his head.

Hicksville, N. Y., Oct. 7 (U.P.).—Baroness Eva von Blixen-Finecke said she was advised in a telephone call from London tonight that Kurt Bjorkvall, Swedish pilot, who refused to take her on his transatlantic flight, was not injured when he was picked up by a trawler off the Irish Coast.

Bjorkval ran out of gasoline, the barnoess said she was advised by the London newspaper which telephoned her.

"I am so glad Kurt is safe," the baroness said. "It is hard to understand how he ran out of fuel. He must have struck some very bad weather.

"I am sorry I did not go along. I would not mind a little water."

Journalist Arrested

KARL RADEK.

Red Journalist Defends Action In Terror Plot

Radek Admits Guilt, Claims He Foiled Trotzky Plan to Kill Stalin.

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, Oct. 7.—Fate of Karl Radek, brilliant former journalistic "mouth-piece" of Dictator Joseph Stalin, may hinge on his last newspaper article penned in his own self-defense.

Arrested today on charges of complicity in a plot to kill Stalin and overthrow the Soviet government, Radek previously wrote a flaming attack on alleged fellow conspirators, 16 of whom were shot last August.

Radek, who disappeared shortly after the executions, was jailed by order of Prosecutor Andrey Vishinsky, and accused of "political and legal guilt" in the counter-revolutionary plot allegedly planned by Leon Trotzky, former Communist leader now in exile in Norway.

Attacked Trotzky.

In his last article, published in the official newspaper Izvestia, Radek confessed his unfaithfulness to the Communist Party, but defended himself with a vitriolic attack on Trotzky and claimed he had "expiated" his sins by foiling Trotzky's attempted sabotage of the Stalin regime.

"Before the Soviet power threw Trotzky out, he persuaded Rakovski, Smigla and myself that it was essential to establish a center abroad from which to direct the Trotzkyist activities in the Soviet Union.

Foiled Plot.

"In January, 1928, he prepared for flight, and urged others, including myself, to do the same. Although I was under the influence of Trotzky at the time and committed grave crimes against the party, I was indignant at the thought of actions against the Soviet Union carried on under the protection of capitalistic states.

It is believed Radek, facing the firing squad end he so violently demanded for "decaying-souled traitors," will base his defense on the part he played in sabotaging Trotzky's alleged plot.

In addition to Radek, three other prominent Soviet leaders may be arrested and brought to trial, it was indicated.

Trio Suspected.

The trio, whose records have been under investigation since the trial of the confessed plotters, August 21, are Nicolai Burkharin, editor of Izvestia; Alexei Rykoff, former Commissar of Posts and Telegraphs, and Gregory Pyatakoff, Assistant Commissar for Heavy Industry.

Crosley Denies WLW Censored Political Talks

By the Associated Press.

Powell Crosley, jr., president of Crosley Radio Corporation, of Cincinnati, denied before the Communications Commission yesterday that WLW, the powerful station it operates, had "censored" political programs.

Crosley's testimony was given at the third day's session of hearings called by the Communications Commission to discuss re-allocating of clear channel assignments.

Obviously angered at suggestions by Commissioner George H. Payne that WLW had rejected requests for radio time from Dr. F. E. Townsend, founder of the Townsend Old-Age Pension Plan, and Representative William Lemke, Union Party Presidential candidate, Crosley replied:

"We have never refused radio time, to my knowledge, to either Dr. Townsend or Representative Lemke. We have leaned over backward to avoid taking part in political or controversial matters."

Frank M. Smith, general sales manager for the corporation, told the commission WLW had "delayed" answering a Townsend request for time on the air because the California physician then was appearing before a Congressional investigating committee. The matter was dropped, he said, after the hearings were concluded.

Questioned further by Payne, Smith said WLW had rejected part of a news comment series prepared by two Washington correspondents, but said it was because "some of the remarks might have held the station open to libel."

Roosevelt Held Side-Stepping Battle on Reds

Republican Chairman Cites Democrats' Withdrawal in Minnesota.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 7.—Republican Chairman John D. M. Hamilton today asserted New Deal leaders brought about the withdrawal of the Democratic Senatorial and gubernatorial candidates in Minnesota in favor of the Farmer-Labor candidates because President Roosevelt "doesn't want to fight the Communists."

"This was right down Mr. Roosevelt's alley," Hamilton told reporters.

"It came in four steps: First, the Communist Party in Minnesota indorsed the Farmer-Labor Party; second, Roosevelt doesn't want to fight the Communists; third, it was necessary to get a united front, and fourth, to achieve the united front, the Democratic Party was dumped. There, you've got a perfect chain."

He reiterated his challenge to the President to give "Government investigators a free hand to rout out the alien agents of communism in this country."

"Do you know whether your views on this subject conform to the views of Gov. Landon?"

"You'll have to ask Gov. Landon," he replied.

Hamilton, who has devoted much of his time during the last few weeks to the drive for campaign funds, said the party was having difficulty raising money.

First Lady Entertains Mme. Wissa

Wife of Minister From Latvia Also Calls on Mrs. Roosevelt.

By Marylyn Reeve.

Although the so-called busy season is not scheduled until after November, a glance at this week's calendar would lead one to believe it were already here. Slowly, but surely, social events are being planned, and given, each following on the other's heels more closely than those before.

Yesterday afternoon there were some informal tea parties. Mrs. Roosevelt, who recently returned to the White House after several days at Hyde Park, in the afternoon received Mme. Famy Wissa, distinguished Egyptian woman who has arrived here for a visit after representing her country at the International Peace Conference at Brussels, Belgium. Doubtless the hostess and guest found much to talk about, as they are both interested in child welfare work.

Later in the afternoon the First Lady was again hostess to a guest at tea, receiving the recently arrived Mme. Bilmanis, wife of the Latvian Minister, Dr. Alfred Bilmanis.

The two women from foreign lands had quite an afternoon of "firsts visits." After their calls at the Executive Mansion, they were received by Mrs. Cordell Hull, wife of the Secretary of State, in her apartment at the Carlton Hotel.

Now that the delegates from Peru and Ecuador to the Boundary Conference are safely here and comfortably settled, some even having moved into business offices, the round of parties in their honor has commenced. Today the Director General of the Pan American Union, Dr. Leo S. Rowe, will be host in their honor at luncheon at the Pan American Union.

In the evening the Minister of Ecuador, Senor Capitan Colon Eloy Alfaro, and Senora de Alfaro will entertain at dinner at the Mayflower for the delegates. The Minister will be host Tuesday when he will give a luncheon. His guests will include the delegates and the Secretary of State, Mr. Cordell Hull.

Within a few days another envoy and his wife will make their first calls at the White House. The Ambassador of Italy, Signor Fulvio Suvich, and Signora Suvich and their children will reach New York today aboard the Conte di Savoia and will come directly to the Capital.

The newly appointed First Secretary of the Embassy, Prince Marcello Gentili del Drago, also arrives on the Italian liner and will come to Washington after a brief stay in New York. He is succeeding Signor Bartolomeo Migone, who left recently for a post with the Embassy in Moscow.

Envoys to Hear Martinelli Sing

Many members of the Diplomatic Corps will attend the concert by Giovanni Martinelli at Constitution Hall tomorrow night.

The Ambassador of Mexico and Senora de Castillo Najera have been added to the list of patrons for the concert announced by Mrs. John W. Guider, chairman of the concert committee for National Homeopathic Hospital. The patron list is headed by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The Embassy of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, where Mr. Martinelli appeared in private recital last season, has taken two boxes, and the Soviet Ambassador and Mrs. Troyanovsky will entertain, among others, the Counselor of the Embassy and Mrs. Constantin Oumansky. The Italian Embassy also has taken a box, as have the Minister of Honduras and Senora de Lozano.

The boxholders' list includes Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Somerville 3d, who will have with them Mr. and Mrs. Westel Willoughby, Dr. and Mrs. Michael McInerney, Mrs. Susie Curran, Mr. Lowell B. Mason; Mrs. James P. McKane, who will entertain Mr. and Mrs. William B. Shearer and Miss Catherine McKane; Mrs. Howell Moorehead, who will have Dr. and Mrs. Lewis Ecker, Mrs. Robert Young Sullivan, Miss Anne Moorehead and Mr. Barry Sullivan; Mr. F. Austin Swartout, jr., who will have as guests Mr. and Mrs. John R. Thomas, Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Loudenslager, and Miss Alice Meynes; Dr. and Mrs. C. F. Warner and Mr. and Mrs. John L. Barr.

The Merry Whirl

By MARYLYN.

Peggy Walsh, popular daughter of the Edward J. Walshes, of Chevy Chase, has as her guest a former schoolmate, who much too quietly arrived in town last evening. The visitor is none other than Ethel Barrymore Colt—surely we need go on no further. The young lady, who comes from a long and illustrious line distinguished in the American theater, thrilled the audience last evening with her performance in "The Romantic Young Lady," which was given at Trinity College.

Peggy and Ethel tackled the three R's at Notre Dame Academy in Philadelphia (as did Ethel's famous mother) and in spite of miles between have kept up their friendship with regular correspondence and a liberal sprinkling of visits at each other's home.

Any Westerner living near Hawthorne street need not think he is imaging the high-pitched yi-yi-ying of a coyote if he hears it because it is not a hallucination nor even a ghost, but the real McCoy. When Sydney Gest returned from his visit to the West he brought as a memento a young coyote and, Sydney, with his family, is fervently hoping that with the proper encouragement and upbringing the young pup will forget his former habits and haunts and become civilized.

When Mrs. Harry Wyllie gives a house party she does so with the utmost thoughtfulness—not leaving out a single thing, not even a bit of excitement. The one she gave a couple of days ago is dominating the conversation of most of the little cliches about town. There was a deer barbeque—hill billy orchestra to provide the "just right" atmosphere for it—at her lovely home atop its own exclusive mountain down in Virginia—and square dances, which every one vowed were much more fun than the usual arrangement of twos. When time came for the departure back to town, the house caught on fire. One of the guests, Mrs. Bernice Fleming-Holland, was sitting, writing in the guest book. When notified, instead of frantically jumping up and rushing about, she thought a moment, registered surprise and then calmly started off in search of water, tossing over her shoulder, "Well, my things are already outside in the car."

The guests formed a bucket brigade and, like the much-talked-about Marines, had the situation well in hand. When the fire department arrived from the distant station 10 miles away (we might add that it was Sunday) the brave lads were attired in their very best and were accompanied by their wives and children, who came along to be the cheering section. There's nothing like a good fire to draw a good crowd. The house is large and handsome—we say "is," because the fire was not so very destructive and its ravages are not so noticeable and can easily be repaired.

Among the Washington guests were Lyle Brookover, Catherine McCane and her mother, Mrs. James McCane (who incidentally have just returned to Washington from their home in Minnesota), Mme. de Ruyter, Mr. and Mrs. William B. Shearer and John F. Richter.

Saw a trio of interesting gentlemen at tea. They weren't together, but close neighbors in one of the popular lounges. Judge J. Crawford Biggs was walking about carefully scrutinizing the people at each table, intent upon his search. Rex Martin, very distinguished looking with piercing black eyes, and jet-black hair and mustache, sat off in a corner talking of this and that with a very attractive blonde attired in gray. At the next table, with two other chaps, Oscar Albertini sipped, smoked and discussed topics of the day.

Mrs. Eldon King goes in for rare old jewelry. At luncheon not so long ago she was wearing an odd little silver locket on a heavy chain that had been picked up in London. No one seems to know whence it originally came, but judging from the dainty etching on the back it might hail from art-loving China.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Wife Asks What to Do in Situation Where Husband, 17 Years Married, Is 'Terribly' Unfaithful.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: We have been married 17 years. We have three lovely children, the youngest 12 years of age. My husband is a good provider, is very kind and indulgent to myself and the children, but he is what is termed a "ladies' man." He has been untrue to me (terribly so) dozens of times. He knows that I know this and that it hurts me terribly, but he goes serenely on doing the same things over and over, going with other women, drinking and staying out two or three nights a week until 3 and 4 o'clock in the morning.

• • • •

I've done everything. Begged and pleaded; quarreled, cried and been indifferent. Nothing helps. He seems to care for the children's good opinion of him, yet not enough to give up his "pleasures." The children are beginning to resent his actions, but he ignores their resentment as he does my feelings in the matter. His salary exceeds $200 a month, but owing to debts incurred when he was making much less we have to live very economically. The children and I have the use of the car about once a week.

• • • •

Please tell me how to handle the situation. A separation is unthinkable on the children's account. I have tried talking the matter over with him, asking him to give up his bad habits for the sake of the children, but he either loses his temper and curses me or tells me in no uncertain terms that he is making the money and providing for us and for that we should be very grateful; and that he has a right to and expects to do as he pleases. In the same breath he tells me I'll do as he says or take the consequences. This letter seems to contradict itself, but he is good and bad by turns, just like this. Please advise me.

HELPLESS.

DEAR HELPLESS: I would say you are helpless in this situation only so long as you think you are helpless. To many women it would be as unthinkable to continue living with such a husband because of the children, as it is unthinkable to you to separate on account of the children. The thing for you to do is to develop a constructive state of mind toward the problem; to assume that conditions can be changed for the better; that they will be; and let your husband's threats and brags dissolve in thin air. If you develop and steadfastly maintain this attitude of mind, refusing to give way to despair or to fear, some way will open up to deliver you from these intolerable conditions in which you are now living.

• • • •

Lucius Humphrey's book, entitled "It Shall Be Done Unto You," described by the author as "a technique of constructive thinking," would be an excellent volume for you to read just now. I think it might throw a brand-new light on your situation, and might bring about a wholesome change in your attitude toward your husband and the problem his conduct presents.

• • • •

Skeptics may laugh at my saying so, but I believe there are crises and muddled conditions in the lives of individuals which can only be solved through prayer; and by prayer, I do not so much mean petitioning Providence at intervals on bended knee to grant a certain favor, as I mean developing and maintaining a consistent spiritual purpose. Once such a purpose takes form in one's imagination, one's every thought and action becomes part of a ceaseless prayer for its materialization on the tangible or physical plane.

• • • •

If leaving your husband is the only road to peace; the only means whereby you can remove yourself and your children from an atmosphere and an association which are subtly degrading, then don't reject the idea on the grounds that it is "unthinkable." I believe it was Emerson who said: "Do the thing and find you have the power." If you have indisputable grounds for divorce, your husband will be required to provide for your maintenance and the children's, so long as they are minors. If necessary, now that your children are growing up, you can get a job and become self supporting, thereby augmenting whatever income you might secure by court order from your husband.

• • • •

If you continue to put up with intolerable conditions simply because you are "helpless;" simply because, to your way of thinking "nothing can be done," then you have only yourself to blame. There is always a way over, under, around or through a distressing situation for the person who diligently and fearlessly seeks it. M. H.

• • • •

In your life you desire peace, dignity, order, harmony, security for yourself and your children. If you have faith and courage, these things should be attainable. But don't put the whole burden for achieving them on another's shoulders, or in the lap of Providence or the gods. You must work for them, and act to secure them as your intelligence and your conscience dictate.

Friend For 'Restless.'

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I should like to know the name and address of the correspondent who signed herself "Restless," and whose letter was published in your column of Monday, October 5. I will appreciate it very much if you will publish a paragraph to this effect, as you stated she did not give her name to you. You may give my name to her, but do not publish it in the column. Sincerely yours,

MRS. E. W. A.

DEAR MRS. E. W. A.: Here is your paragraph in print. I trust it may be read by the correspondent who signed herself "Restless." If she is as eager for friends as she professed herself to be, she is probably on the lookout for such rejoiners to her letter. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Furs Used Lavishly.

Paris (U.P.).—Vionnet uses fur lavishly as trimming for both sports and dressy clothes. Beaver is shown extensively for street wear on tweeds and woolens in the henna, burnt orange, brown and bottle green shades. For evening, five and six skins of silver fox are used to trim velvet or soft duvetine coats and capes.

Pods Also Edible.

Development of the melting sugar pea—which can be served pods and all—adds the latest member to the leguminous vegetable list. This new pea grows in stringless pods so tender that both peas and pods can be cooked and eaten together. The vines grow about 5 feet high.

'Touch of Genius' Is Sorry Excuse For Bad Temper

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

"WE ARE a temperamental household. Of course none of us is a genius, but we all have just enough of the divine fire to give us a touch of artistic temperament, and the result is constant explosions of one kind and another."

"A touch of genius" is the excuse for a great deal of bad temper, and nothing else. Mother thinks she has a suppressed talent for acting, father is always about to write a book, son is nearly a painter, daughter dreams of being a musician, and in the effort at self-expression, no one considers anyone else. The result is frazzled nerves and chronic crossness in the entire family.

If people would stop excusing a child's peculiarities on the grounds of temperament, there would be fewer neurotics in the world. John's talent for painting is no reason for unsociability, nor does Mary's musical talent give her the right to shudder every time she hears a noise, or to slam her door or scream with rage if her small sister should play a wrong note.

The best way to teach children control is to practice it one's self. If children are allowed to "get away" with this kind of behavior when they are small, they will continue to do so when they grow up. Neither talent nor genius has the right to interfere with the lives of others.

Designs With Architectural Technique

Composite Picture in Costume Is Advocated by Helen Johnson

American Fashion Designer Declares No One Part Should Stand Out Before Others; Employs Architectural Technique.

By Ethel Ehlen.
The Post Fashion Editor.

"THE COSTUME should present a composite picture, no one part of it should be noticed before the others; like a house, the general theme should be taken in at one time." The speaker was Helen Johnson, American designer, who studied to become an architect, but instead, designs clothes with an architectural technique. Because of her training, her smart creations are sculptored to the body; regardless of the styling, the lines of the figure are never lost. Line, that is proportion, is the most important requisite when designing a frock, Miss Johnson contends; and angles are far more interesting than curves since the figure has enough curves and one must use angles in designing or loose the figure entirely.

"If a frock is smart enough, the wearer caters to it. When it is architecturally correct she walks and stands correctly; it simply makes her throw back her shoulders and gives poise to the body," Miss Johnson explained. "I never tell a stout woman I will design a costume to make her look slender," she volunteered; "instead, I create something especially for her type—a frock that flatters a plump figure."

Discovers New Cut.

Miss Johnson's models are designed without any relation to traditional seams, tucks or gores. One of her smartest creations is made—sleeves and all—of only two pieces of fabric. This season she discovered a new cut which, she tells you with the pride of achievement, eliminates one more seam. Her ambition is to design a frock of only one piece of material—sans fastenings entirely.

'Scissors are wonderful instruments to work with. I love to take a gorgeous piece of material and simply go adventuring with a zip, cutting an angle and making it the theme of the frock," enthusiastically stated this wizard of the shears.

Miss Johnson does not work from sketches, but directly with fabric, scissors and brains! That is where her geometry comes in handy—(it was one of her favorite subjects in college)—and she maintains she always knows what the fabric is going to do long before she cuts into it. "Without trimming, one can equalize the figure," remarked this architect-designer, "and that is why I use practically no trimming in my designing—certainly none that doesn't immediately become part of the costume." All of which goes back to basic principles of architecture and purity of line in designing, she informed me.

Her creations are all subtle, simple and individual, her fabrics exquisite and exclusive; she always works with the grain of the fabric, to insure against false lines. Asked if she had any pet antipathies about this interesting designing game, she immediately answered with vehemence. "I simply am unable to make or design a green costume—any shade of green; other colors do not affect me at all, but I seem to have some kind of complex about green."

To view Miss Johnson's collection is to witness a composite of her ancestry. A famous architect in Sweden was her grandfather—responsible for her study of architecture. A vivid grandmother with the zest for life gave her the gift of color, music and romance, which balances the old American-New England conservatism of her mother, featured in her simple, tailored street clothes. The vivid personality of her Russian grandmother, however, creeps out unexpectedly and delightfully in her evening gowns.

Miss Johnson studied in Paris for three years, following her American study of architecture, at the same time designing Parisian fabrics. This accounts for the unusually lovely fabrics chosen for her creations. However, she is not dominated by Paris. She already had used broadcloth last season and is now employing a silk-finished broadcloth for her latest designs. This is significant, since Paris "discovered" the extremely popular broadcloth for the current French fall collections.

"I never design a costume that could not be worn indefinitely; I want my creations to be well done and so 'fashion fool-proof' they will not be dated, even in several seasons. Because of this I sometimes refuse to design for a client who nonchalantly exclaims that she wants a little frock to serve for just several wearings," concluded this unusual young designer, with her own ideas about everything pertaining to her business

And doesn't such stability track back to architecture, too? Houses are built to stand for years; Miss Johnson declares that she expects to spend her declining years designing homes—in the interim, she designs feminine wardrobes from an architectural viewpoint.

Today's HEALTH TALK

Angina Pectoris.

The phenomenon which we recognize as angina pectoris (angina—pain; pectoris—chest) is characterized by come-and-go stabbing paroxysms felt chiefly beneath the breast bone. Afflicted persons will state usually that the symptom appears following muscular effort—even walking against a stiff wind—exposure to cold, or nervous excitement.

What is the cause of the pain? There are numerous theories, but little that is definite has been added to the older concept that the agony appears because the heart muscle fails to receive enough blood. The heart is a constantly working muscular affair, and in order to perform its duties it must be nourished by an adequate circulation. If the coronary vessels—those which feed the muscle—are narrowed and hardened (sclerosed) they will be unable to carry the requisite amount of blood. Furthermore, if the heart itself has become hardened or fibrosed, as we say, the cells cannot be bathed sufficiently with the life-giving fluid. All of which means that at certain periods when the heart becomes anemic (from reduction of blood supply) waste products will accumulate and discomfort ensue.

Treatment must be based, therefore, on improving the circulation to and of the heart. Some lessening of activity may be called for. There is no occasion, however, for making bed or chair invalids out of these individuals. In fact, the ordinary mode of life should be pursued with the exclusion of physical strain, unusual exertion, exposure to weather extremes, etc.

Obesity in patients with heart difficulties of all sorts requires vigorous and persistent treatment. It is well known that digestive errors may complicate the situation, hence every one should be cautioned to use food that is easily assimilated.

Girl Advised Not to Accept Clothes Gifts

Some Women Do Take Such Presents; Good Form Against It.

By Margaret Wallace.

THE PROBLEM of what gifts a woman may accept from a man is one that is puzzling a young Washington business woman who has written to this department to assist her in making a decision.

"Dear Miss Wallace: I am a young business woman and make a very good salary. I have a very nice man friend whom I expect to marry when we are both more successful in business. Every birthday he gives me a number of nice books, a pocketbook and sends me flowers and candy. This year I have had to help my people and have not been able to buy myself a fall suit. We are both invited to a number of afternoon parties, where I want to look smart and well dressed. He has suggested that he spend the money he ususally spends on candy and flowers and books and such things for a new suit for me. My mother is horrified with the idea. Some of my friends declare that a gift is a gift and the nature of it does not matter, and that it is just as proper for me to accept a suit as it is flowers to wear or a pocketbook to carry. Some of them have even taken wrist watches from their men friends, and one of them always accepts her hats as gifts from one of her admirers. My friend is very much offended because I hesitate about accepting the suit. J. R. P.

Your mother is correct in her contention that it would not be good form to accept a present of clothing from a man. In this day and age some well-bred women do accept such things from men and do not feel that they are liable to criticism. But the strict letter of good form does not allow this.

Trimmings Factor On Milady's Gown

Astrakhan fur makes bowknots on satin blouses and buttons on tailored suits. Leather trimmings are used like ribbons, and felt trimmings like fur. Braid bindings run along the edges of jackets, and pipings run up and down seams or outlined necks and girdle edges.

Gay embroidery motifs, like colored butterflies or exotic buds, appear on dark dresses. Chenille embroidery makes borders for black broadcloth coats and suits, and broadcloth evening dresses have cutwork in lace designs to finish the hems. Fancy quilting and cording

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Oct. 7.

WELL, father's favorite rocking-chair is now in its new corner, and the tropical fish are getting acclimated to their fresh quarters. Our annual autumn madness, called "Moving Day," which falls like the crash of a grand piano on October 1, is over, and a quarter of a million Gothamites are beginning to find out what's wrong with their new homes (?).

JANE OLCOTT.

New York's moving day, I am sure, is unique. For no particular reason, a city of 250,000 people goes stark, screaming crazy every fall and moves frantically—perhaps only across the street. Nights and days are hideous with the crashing of falling crockery, the screeches of home-loving parrots, the barking of evicted Pekes and the low, growling curses of husbands-on-the-move. Snorting, fuming vans block traffic on every side street. It reminds me of the great tribal hegiras of scriptural times—save that it is completely nutty.

Everything costs more this year. Rents are up in a balloon with no parachute; van-hire and furniture-smashers' wages increased. Twenty-five thousand telephones have been shifted in two weeks! Yet our nervous, restless, ever-dissatisfied citizens moved as usual, come October 1, and soon learned that the man across the court was studying the trombone. We never improve our state, somehow. No—I stayed right on here in the old Murray Hill burrow. The dear old landlord didn't tilt the tariff, and the neighbors are well-resigned to my poor spouse's early-morning rendition of "Don't tease the old man, boys!"

Girl About Town—Local society gals never learn. Children of 18 get engaged to minor European nobility before they know which way is south, and the great majority of the alliances are ill-starred. When Janet Olcott, pretty young adopted daughter of the late famed Irish tenor, busted her troth with Count Phillipe de Montague, upper-crust dowagers dropped their lorgnettes. But smiling in the background was a nice local kid named Bill Cavanaugh, "Janey's" ardent swain this long time . . .

Saw Gladys Lloyd Robinson, pretty wife of Actor Edward G. Robinson, sail for London on the Normandie to rejoin her helpmate, making an English movie. With her, of course, was 4-year-old Manny. Robinson was desolate without them when I visited him in the British capital. His room at the Savoy was practically papered with pictures of them . . .

Also on that great skiff were Jose Iturbi, the Spanish dream-man conductor, and little Sally O'Neill, once well known in our movies . . . The great campaign to keep ladies from drinking at bars in our public houses gains momentum and zip. Paul Henkel, president of our Society of Restaurateurs, says that a poll of his crowd shows 98 per cent of the members in favor of confining the ladies' nipping to tables . . .

• • • •

One of the things I wanted most to see in London was the much-praised "English complexion." My researches proved it very rare, but when seen, it is a wondrous sight—a snowy whiteness of skin through which glows the healthy pink that no cosmetician can ever put in a box.

Trailer Census

The Bureau of the Census has another worry on its mind these days and we're afraid we're partly to blame. With the popularity of trailers increasing so steadily that for all one knows 1940 might find us a nation of nomads, it occurred to us that the bureau's census-takers would have a devil of a time getting records of persons living in trailers.

All of the census officials we spoke to agreed that it was a problem and none could offer a solution. Still it will be another two or three years before plans for the 1940 census are made and by that time the problem may have been solved. Any person with ideas on the subject is invited to send in his suggestions either to this column or to census officials.

Despite the expulsion of Justice Lodge 21 from the A. F. G. E. and the formation of a new lodge at the department, the whole business may pop into the news again, we have been informed.

Social Security Paper

The Social Security Board Union, one of the A. F. G. E. units whose temporary certificates were revoked, plans to distribute the first issue of a new semi-monthly publication today.

The publication, which is to be four pages, will be given out gratis to board employes several days before each meeting, the second and fourth Thursdays of each month.

Tentatively the editorial staff consists of Harry Venneman, editor, and Olivia Israeli, Arthur Bernstein, Elaine Couper and Emanuel Neumark, assistant.

Other A. F. G. E. notes . . . PWA workers employed by the District government have applied to national headquarters for a charter, the membership is around 50 with William Cleary, tentative headman . . . Temporary officers of the new Justice group are S. T. Chichester, president; S. J. Tracy, secretary, and Guy B. DeSpain, treasurer . . . James G. Yaden and Charles Hoffman, of Internal Revenue, are the Washington representatives on the standings constitutional committee . . . The District department's low-fare excursion to New York over the week-end of October 16 has attracted two Cincinnati unionists.

John Chedester, of the General Accounting Office, will head the membership council of the United Civil Service Employes, Claude Babcock's new organization. Tonight at the Hotel Harrington will be the first meeting.

Sweet Potato Chips

Sweet potato lovers will be delighted to learn that a Department of Agriculture plant industry scientist has hit upon a formula for making sweet potato chips.

Right now the only potato chips on the market are those made from Irish potatoes. With the new formula, patented this week by Byron C. Brunstetter, any potato chip maker will be able to use the same machinery to manufacture sweet potato chips.

The secret is entirely in the temperature to which the potatoes are heated. For the ordinary potato chip the best temperatures are from 356 to 400 degrees Fahrenheit; for sweet potato chips, 302 degrees is maximum and 275 minimum. Sweet potato chips will also have to be cut a little thinner and greater care must be exercised in choosing the proper varieties, as the tastes of different kinds of sweet potatoes vary greatly.

Brunstetter's new formula, developed after more than two years' experimentation, is to be released to the public for general use. It will prove not only a boon to sweet potato eaters and potato chip sellers but to potato growers. At present roughly one-fourth of the sweet potato crop is rejected because of irregular shapes, being too large or too small. Brunstetter believes these cast-offs may prove ideal chip fodder.

Notes

A. B. Niess, head of the records division, of Internal Revenue, has been appointed acting head of the social security division of the bureau. Assisting him is George E. Professional Tasting Is Their Meat

Budget Bureau Holds Up Funds On Girls' School

The Budget Bureau in an unprecedented step has instructed the District Commissioners to hold up plans for remodeling the National Training School for Girls, it was disclosed yesterday, although a $100,000 appropriation for the reconstruction was placed in the District act at the request of two Senators.

The Budget Bureau heretofore has confined its supervision of District finances to budgetary estimates. District officials said it was the first time the Federal agency had instructed them to hold up a legal appropriation.

The condition of the penal institution was characterized as "disgraceful" and "barbarous" by Senators Copeland (Democrat), of New York, and King (Democrat), of Utah, following an inspection tour. Subsequently, Mrs. Roosevelt advocated the need for modern quarters.

Consolidation First.

An explanation for the action of the Budget Bureau, according to Lieut. Col. Dan I. Sultan, Engineer Commissioner, was that the appropriation should not be spent until District welfare authorities considered the consolidation of all municipal institutions housing girl wards.

There are three such institutions—the Industrial Home School, for "problem children," including 38 girl inmates; the Children's Receiving Home, and the training school, for incorrigible girls committed by the courts.

Social welfare students held that the three phases of reform should be kept separate, pointing out that the training school corresponds to a reform school, the Industrial Home School to a parental institution, and the receiving home to a temporary shelter pending juvenile court action.

Was Not Considered.

Elwood Street, director of public welfare, said the board had not considered such a combination nor had it been requested to do so by the Commissioners.

Earle W. Cassie, superintendent of the Industrial Home School, in an annual report released yesterday opposed the proposal to consolidate the children's penal institutions and to separate the boys and girls.

"This institution is unique," he said, "in that it cares for both sexes. It is obvious that such an arrangement is more normal than the plan of keeping boys in one institution and girls in another.

"This setup is designed to produce a normal atmosphere, the staff taking the place of parents, eating together in the same dining room, attending the same school and participating jointly in entertainments."

The proposed plan was to erect two modern cottages with a central kitchen so that even at the Training School the more hardened inmates could be separated from the newcomers.

Tasting Delicacies Just Chore To U. S. Agricultural Experts

When Marie Antoinette taunted, "Let 'em eat cake," the chances are someone from the United States Department of Agriculture stood forth before the Queen and suggested:

"All right, if you say so, but first let the cake be sampled by our official tasters for flavor, texture, aroma and general appearance."

That's the impression one obtains from a tasting tour of the department. Almost everything, from soy beans to pork chops, is undergoing experimental mastication down there, to the end that more succulent foodstuffs may be produced.

Yesterday happened to be leg of lamb day. Around a table sat two women and a man. They were expert meat tasters. The menu for this day was leg of lamb (eight helpings), apple and cold water.

Apple Is a Chaser.

The apple serves as a sort of between-the-acts chaser; the water likewise. After each dose of meat—and you may be sure "dose" is the proper word, considering it must be eaten without seasoning—the taster takes a drag from the fruit and a sip from the glass, and sits back resignedly to wait for the next plate of leg of lamb to be introduced.

Yesterday's subjects happened to be Nicholas G. Barbella, of the Bureau of Animal Industry, an authority on meat flavors; Mrs. Adelle B. Freeman, of the Bureau of Home Economics, and Mrs. Tentie Johnson, Animal Industry. To them it was only a repetition of a familiar chore.

In the adjoining kitchen O. G. Hankins, senior animal husbandman in charge of meat investigations (and a darned good man with a carving knife), was preparing the dishes with the fastidious care of mother fixing her baby's milk. The eight legs had been roasted just so. It was his task now to test the meat's toughness on a shearing-strength machine and slice the helpings for the tasters.

A Batch of Lamb.

This was a batch of Wyoming lamb, shipped all the way from Laramie, so Barbella, Mrs. Freeman and Mrs. Johnson could give it a going over. Altogether, 79 animals, representing four breeding types, made the fatal trip. From these, 32 were selected for the sacrifice, 8 of each breed.

Yesterday was the second day of this particular study, which will take four days. At each sampling session each taster is getting a try at eight legs. Two cuts each from four breeds are on the daily menu.

Woman, 2 Men Held After Number Raid

Two men and a woman, all colored, we held under $1,500 bond yesterday on charges of operating a lottery after their arrest in a store across the street from the Garnett-Patterson Junior High School.

At police headquarters, they gave their names as Francis DeLeon, 38; his wife, Frances, both of the 900 block V street northwest and John S. Wilson, 41, of the 1900 block Third street northwest.

According to Sergt. George Deyoe, who led the raiders, a quantity of alleged "numbers" slips were found in the establishment in the 900 block V street northwest. The place was operating not more than 50 yards from the school and the small amounts shown on the slips led police to believe bets were being accepted from school children.

Bank Teller Heads Fall Grand Jurors

Ralph G. Wilson, teller in the National Bank of Washington, was chosen as the foreman of the District grand jury for the term ending the fall session of District Court in December. Wilson was picked by Justice Peyton Gordon late yesterday after the jurist had scanned the list of prospective grand jurors.

L. G. Hoover Is Promoted To Principal

Lawrence G. Hoover, for the last eight years assistant principal, yesterday was promoted to principal of Central High School.

In approving the recommendation of Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, and its personnel committee, the Board of Education named a successor to Dr. Harvey A. Smith, who last June was named assistant superintendent of schools.

Hoover has been serving as acting principal since the current school year began and his promotion to the head position had the backing of the Central and several other Parent-Teacher groups.

Board Bars Pupil.

The board yesterday denied a request from John S. Kemp, Department of the Interior employe who lives in Clarendon, Va., that his 11-year-old daughter, Lois, be permitted to attend Gordon Junior High School pending outcome of a District Court decision on her right to be enrolled there.

Kemp, who has asked the court for a writ of mandamus compelling Dr. Ballou to admit Lois to Gordon as a nonresident pupil, appeared before the board. Lois, who attended Fillmore School last year, was told on the first day of school this fall that she could not enter Gordon, to which she was promoted, because of overcrowded conditions there.

"Anticipating just this kind of a situation, I had Lois, who had been going to a Virginia school, entered in Fillmore last year so she would be eligible for enrollment in Gordon this fall," Kemp said. "I did that on the advice of Dr. Stephen E. Kramer (then first assistant superintendent), who said that any pupil already enrolled in a District school would have no trouble when promoted to a junior high school."

Kemp also told the board he had three other children in District schools, two in Western High School and one in Fillmore School.

His request that Lois be allowed to go to Gordon pending the court's decision was denied by the adoption of a motion of Henry I. Quinn, Henry Gilligan, who cast the lone dissenting vote, previously had moved that the request be granted.

Dr. Ballou, because of illness, did not attend yesterday's meeting, but had submitted to the board a detailed report on the question of changing the hour of opening school. The report was received, but will be held over for a subsequent meeting.

Several Disadvantages.

While not definitely recommending any action on the proposal either to advance the present 9 a. m. opening to 8:30 o'clock, or delay it to 9:30 a. m. in the interests of relieving traffic, the superintendent pointed out several disadvantages to the later hour, which has been favored by traffic officials.

A later opening hour, Ballou said, would necessitate a later closing hour, which would work a hardship on many pupils employed after school hours. It also would interfere, he pointed out, with the after-school program of the high school cadets, and football, basketball and other outdoor activities; with the after-school classes taken by school teachers in colleges and universities; with Community Center Department activities; and with after-school conferences of school officers.

His report also included tables obtained from the Traffic Bureau showing the hours of the peak traffic load on Washington streets.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Ashford.

Clerk, 74, Twice a Widower, Weds Third Time; Bride Is 35

Two lonely hearts beat as one last night, and were lonely no longer.

For kindly Henry C. Ashford, 74, twice a widower, and Mrs. Caroline Jones, 35, whose husband died last June, were married by the Rev. H. M. Hennig in the rectory of Trinity Lutheran Church last night.

The bridegroom, trim and erect and youngish-looking despite his years, and the bride, shy and almost afraid, were drawn together by their mutual bereavement.

What was the use of going through life alone? It is not good for man to live alone, nor for woman to live alone, they told one another.

Ashford, who is a retired shipping clerk, lost his second wife last summer, shortly after they had celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. Mrs. Jones' husband, Gus, died at the age of 54.

In her husband's eye there was a merry twinkle.

For he is generally known as a merry man, with sharp wit and numerous jokes.

The bride's 3-year-old daughter, Iris, did not attend the ceremony. She was cared for by friends until her mother and her new stepfather returned.

Acton Charged With Shooting Salesman Here

Frank H. Acton, 35, of the 600 block Seventh street northwest, yesterday was charged with assault with intent to kill, following the shooting of Donald E. Mersch, 29-year-old salesman, Sunday night.

Two men, said by police to have been with Acton on the night of the shooting, Jesse E. Jones, 18, of the 1300 block Tenth street northwest, and Bela A. Stramer, 23, of the 1000 block Twenty-fifth street northwest, were ordered held as witnesses.

The shooting occurred at Eleventh and E streets southwest. Mersch was struck in his abdomen and chest by bullets which police said Acton admitted firing.

According to Detective Sergt. William Liverman, of the homicide squad, who investigated the case with Detective Perry, of the Fourth Precinct Station, the shots were fired following an argument over money Acton is alleged to have taken from Mersch.

Meanwhile, Judge Edward M. Curran yesterday ordered an attachment issued for Jones for violation of probation. According to Police Court attaches, Jones was given a suspended sentence on a charge of intoxication several weeks ago.

The men will be arraigned in Police Court this morning.

Dickinson Will Speak.

Assistant Attorney General John Dickinson will be the speaker when the North Carolina Democratic Society meets at the Raleigh Hotel at 8:30 o'clock tonight.

Boys' School Report Asks New Building

Need for Hospital Facility Cited; Colored Home Also Wants Boost.

Requests for a hospital building with isolated wards for tuberculosis and other contagious diseases, an additional dormitory ward, and an increase in personnel are contained in the annual report submitted to the District Commissioners yesterday by Dr. James Lewald, superintendent of the District Training School.

Dr. Lewald also asked for a school to provide instruction in both occupational and academic subjects, with the building containing an auditorium and gymnasium.

Shortage Feared.

Commenting on the $193,500 appropriation for 1936, the superintendent said:

"This is too low to afford any luxuries and makes it difficult to provide all necessities."

Wendell Tucker, superintendent of the Industrial Home School for Colored Children, cited the need for more vocational departments.

"It was impossible," he said, "to furnish a sufficient number of vocational opportunities for more than one-third of the average number of boys, and then for very short periods."

Few Improvements.

He pointed out that only one small vocational building, costing about $5,000, had been added to the institution in 29 years. The school has no auditorium or gymnasium, he said, for presentation of plays, as in public schools.

The Receiving Home for Children reported that 3,119 children had been admitted during the last fiscal year and had been given 18,182 days' care.

Of those admitted, 2,735 were police cases, 384 were dependent, transient or lost.

Brown Orders Police Inspection on Monday

Ina Claire Is Foremost Star Of Show Week

Ina Claire, native Washingtonian and one of the theater's foremost comediennes, costarred with Osgood Perkins in S. N. Behrman's lively play of "End of Summer," will be the attraction at the National Theater for the week beginning next Monday night. This second of the season's Theater Guild productions was one of last year's substantial New York successes. Mr. Behrman, the author, needs no introduction to Washington as a composer of the smartest lines heard across the contemporary footlights. The principals, of course, will be supported by a cast of the first water. There will be the usual matinees on Wednesday and Saturday.

Rosalind Russell and John Boles are costars of the superlatively excellent film version of George Kelly's Pulitzer prize play of "Craig's Wife," which will be presented as chief screen feature of next week's bill at the Warner Brothers' Earle Theater by Columbia Pictures. The story is of a self-centered woman who brings her world crashing down about her head by a peculiar faculty for introversion. The supporting cast is led by Billie Burke, Jane Darwell, Dorothy Wilson, Robert Allen, Nudia Westman, Alma Kruger, Thomas Mitchell and Elisabeth Risdon. The stage bill, beginning tomorrow, will be headlined by "Red" Nichols and his orchestra and will include Jimmie Shea and Guy Raymond.

"Dodsworth," Sidney Howard's screen version of his own dramatization of the Sinclair Lewis novel, will be the feature at Loew's Palace Theater for the week beginning tomorrow, with Walter Huston in his original title role, supported by Ruth Chatterton, Mary Astor, Paul Lukas, Spring Byington and others of note. The transcription of this famous stage play to the screen has been accomplished with approximate perfection.

Robert Taylor and Barbara Stanwyck will be seen as costars on the screen for the first time in the National Capital during the week beginning tomorrow, when the chief feature of the bill at Loew's Capitol will be "His Brother's Wife," a picture with something of the groundwork and flavor of "Arrowsmith." Mr. Taylor adds something here to his constantly growing stature as a matinee idol and Miss Stanwyck contributes the best performance she has offered in many months. On the stage for the new week, Phil Lampkin, for the third time in recent months, will present his "Varieties"—a vaudeville revue in which he himself will step out as a "hoofer" and show some of these Fred Astaires and Bill Robinsons how dancing really should be done. Others on his bill will include the Elida Dancers, Frank Libuse, all-American nut; Helen Ely, singer; Pritchard and Lord, dancers, Nell Kelly and Three Maids and a Mike.

So generous has been the public response to the hilarious fun of "My Man Godfrey," at RKO-Keith's, that the film version of the Eric Hatch novel, costarring William Powell and Carole Lombard, supported by Alice Brady, Gail Patrick, Eugene Pallette, Mischa Auer and an entirely competent cast, will be continued for another week.

"The Texas Rangers," that stirring melodrama of the early days of the Lone Star State, in which Fred MacMurray, Jack Oakie and Jean Parker have the foremost roles, after a successful week at the Earle, opens tomorrow as major feature of the bill at the Metropolitan.

War-torn China is the background of the engrossing action that characterizes "The General Died at Dawn," which moves on to the screen at Loew's Columbia Theater for the week beginning tomorrow. It will be recalled that Gary Cooper, Madeleine Carroll and Akim Tamiroff appear in the principal roles.

Beginning today at the Rialto Theater, the principal feature of the bill will be a revival of "Cimarron," the film version of the Edna Ferber novel in which the pivotal roles are played by Richard Dix and Irene Dunne, supported by Edna May Oliver, George E. Stone, Estelle Taylor and many others of note. Short subjects complete the bill.

The Belasco Theater announces that "Dinner at Eight," the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the play by George S. Kaufman and Edna Ferber, will continue on the screen throughout the remainder of the current week. The next atraction will be "Cynara," with Ronald Colman and Kay Francis. An all-star cast, in the truest sense, appears in "Dinner at Eight."

So great has been the appeal of the return engagement of "Naughty Marietta," co-starring Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy, at the Little Theater, that it will be continued through another week. The rousing song numbers in this film are worth hearing.

A new Independent Burlesque Association production will come to the Gayety Theater for the week beginning Sunday afternoon. The featured performer is Dorothy Dee, a newcomer from the West. The comedy will be in the hands of Joe DeRita, Harry Myers and Bobby Faye.

About The Showshops

IT HAS never been my good fortune to encounter a more rousing demonstration of civic pride and enthusiasm than was manifested in Sidney Lust's Arcade Theater, in Hyattsville, Md., on Tuesday night when "Miss Hyattsville" was chosen to reign as queen of the Golden Jubilee Anniversary of the incorporation of the neighboring town on Saturday.

BELL.

If the Arcade had contained twice as many seats, it still would not have been able to accommodate the crowds striving to gain entrance to one of the important preliminaries of the major celebration day after tomorrow.

Mayor H. T. Willis, general chairman of the celebration, shared the evening's honors with Mr. Lust, whose acute showmanship had much to do with the success of an occasion in which I am sure my esteemed contemporaries, Miss Betty Hynes and Edward De Selding Melcher, were as happy to participate as I was.

All of the city committeemen were present and Jack Aiello was a genial and ingratiating master of ceremonies of the outdoor goings-on, surrendering his "mike" to Dave Ginsberg when the proceedings moved indoors.

The selection of "Miss Hyattsville" presented the judges with no mean task. There were paraded across the Arcade stage, identified only by numbers, a score or more of the handsomest young women one would care to meet in a lifetime of beauty judging. The choices of queen and maids of honor finally were unanimously decided upon and no "split decisions," as Master Bill McCormick would say, were rendered.

Announcement was made of the winners in yesterday morning's Post, along with the publication of a picture of the young and charming Miss Miriam Alexander, whose queenship seemed to be impaired only by an understandable diffidence before the loudspeaker. Being only 16 years of age, Miss Alexander is still unaccustomed to public speaking. And who is not?

You should have heard Betty and Eddie and me!

At least, it may be said that the "Miss Hyattsville" contest was judged on a sounder basis than some of the others that have been held recently in the Capital, when mathematics have completely defeated the intention of the judges. I mean the unjust method of according a nomination for first place, 5 votes; second, 3 votes, and third, 1 vote. By this tricky system it is possible for the second choice of a majority of the judges to finish in first place. Take, for example, a case in which one girl is voted for once for first and four times for second. That gives her a total of 17 ballots. A contestant chosen as first by three judges and once for third would garner a total of only 13 votes, although she obviously would be the first choice of more judges than the one who walked off with the prize.

There was none of this sort of shenanigan in the Hyattsville voting. And I hope no feelings were hurt by what three of us deemed to be an honest and impartial estimate of those qualities one somehow expects in one who is to exert something of the queenly bearing before huge throngs of admiring citizenry.

Many people, it has been called to my attention, feel that the newsreel of today will be the history books of tomorrow.

Persons with such lively imaginations finds considerable real basis for their view in the history of the Trans-Lux Theater, one of which no wis being constructed on Fourteenth street between New York avenue and H street. It is planned to open this new type of Washington playhouse sometime late in November, although I feel that they will be lucky if they get it ready that soon. Having served in one capacity or another at many theater dedications, I am willing, however, to admit that no theater ever gives promise of throwing open its doors to the public as early as it actually performs that feat.

By some miracle, new theaters always are ready a little ahead of time—even if the last of the muss has to be swept under the carpet and some of the chairs are not as yet screwed down.

But getting back to Trans-Lux. The first of the Trans-Luxers was founded to test the news-pictorial consciousness of the public a few years ago. That was at Madison avenue and Fifty-eighth street, in New York. The experiment proved a great success. Soon the theater moved to larger quarters on Sixtieth street. A second theater was opened on Broadway at Fiftieth street, a third on Fulton street in Brooklyn, a fourth on Flatbush avenue in the same borough, and recently the Trans-Lux idea spread to Philadelphia, where a fifth newsreel theater brings current events to the descendants of William Penn.

The Washington house now under construction will be sixth in the chain.

The sole guide in fashioning the programs of the Trans-Lux houses is "news value." There are no axes to grind and, wherever possible, both sides of any controversial question are presented.

Out of this impartial contemplation of the news of the day the management of this unique theatrical enterprise has evolved a sort of public service that embraces a bureau of public relations that attempts to provide subject matter on the screen of particular interest to the theater's patrons. A long list of subjects makes up the files of this department of news reporting by celluloid.

It is one of the supreme advantages enjoyed by the newsreel that, since they are news, they are not subject to the rigid censorship imposed upon fictional screen subjects. Thus it has come about, from time to time, that startlingly realistic "shots" have been recorded and publicly exhibited—even down to physical violence and actual murder before the very lens of the newsman's camera.

That is the sort of thing that will be coming along shortly on Fourteenth street.

The Capital of the Nation seldom has played host to a more ebullient visitor than Fred Fralich, who spent Tuesday and Wednesday here just snooping around. Mr. Fralich, in case you hadn't heard, is the personal representative of a dozen or so of the film capital's brightest stars, including Robert Taylor, Lewis S. Stone and others of comparable standing. He came here specifically and exclusively to see the sights and that is specifically and exclusively what he did. Few of us possess such singleness of purpose.

Form Popular Romantic Team

The above likenesses are those of Robert Taylor and Barbara Stanwyck, co-stars of "His Brother's Wife," which comes to the screen of Loew's Capitol Theater for the week beginning tomorrow. This is their first cinema association and will do much to rehabilitate Miss Stanwyck in the eyes of picture patrons who have not been entirely devastated by her recent screen assignments. The story bears a sort of distant kinship to Sinclair Lewis' "Arrowsmith," although nothing seems to have been borrowed outright from that worthy fiction.

ACCORDING to studio announcements, Darryl Zanuck's first picture for Eddie Cantor will be based upon the comic's autobiography. Still unsettled, though, is the question as to whether Cantor owns the rights to the story of his own life. Dave Freedman, the script writer, once collaborated with Eddie on "My Life Is in Your Hands." Dave owns the copyright to the material—and will bring suit if the picture is released . . . Incidentally, Georgie Jessel, Cantor's arch-fuedist, was asked to write the scenario for Eddie's life story . . . "Sure, I'll write the story," Jessel agreed, "but will Cantor play a Heavy?"

TWO HOURS before the curtain rose at the premiere of "White Horse Inn," Dr. Hans Muller, the librettist, was told that his entire fortune had been wiped out—by the devaluation of the franc. "I will shoot myself," he wailed . . . To his woes, later, was added the distress of seeing a property man ruin a gag by missing the cue to blow a steamboat whistle . . . "Now I'm in a real fix," Muller sobbed to the culprit. "I don't know whether to shoot myself because the franc dropped, or because you missed the cue . . . But I have it! I have it! I will compromise—by shooting you!"

Hollywood's Film Folks

Tearoom Talent.

Hollywood, Oct. 7.

James Stewart's popularity can be gauged by the telephone in Square Deal Grady's office. Square Deal is the casting director at Metro, and the phone jingles are the calls from other studios to borrow him.

VIRGINIA BRUCE.

He's the most promising young actor in Hollywood, and he must appeal to the female fans, for he appeals to the female performers. He's more in demand as an "off the screen" leading man than Robert Taylor. Now, his three companions are Eleanor Powell, Virginia Bruce and Ginger Rogers.

What's his lure? He says they like to go with him because he likes to dance, and that he goes with them because they're good dancing partners. That's his story.

He hails from Indiana, Pa., and was born on May 20, 1908.

He is Scot-Irish. He was a skinny kid, wore eye glasses, built model planes and wanted to be a big game hunter.

He is 6 feet 3 inches tall, and weighs 160 pounds. He weighed 140 when he started his flicker career. He is still trying to put on weight. He has brown hair, which seldom stays combed. People tell him that his hair is streaked with gray. He can't find the gray, but it's there.

He became interested in theatricals while at Princeton. He is a graduate of that college and has a degree in architecture, but the main thing he got from Princeton—the stage experience he got in the Triangle shows there. The day after he was graduated he accepted an offer from two Princeton grads to work at their stock company at Falmouth, Mass.

His job with this stock company was to play the accordion in the combination tea room and night club next to the theater. He was finally given a chance to go on the stage, playing a bit.

Later, he appeared in stock in Baltimore with Margaret Sullavan and Henry Fonda, who were then unknown. Fonda became his pal. He and Hank had a house together in Beverly until Fonda got married. He now shares the house with John Swope.

Rumors Start As Players Scatter

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 7.—World Series ball players scrambled out of the big town today, leaving behind an assortment of conflicting rumors, a horde of second guessers and instructions where to send their World Series checks.

The ageless rumor that Col. T. L. Huston, former part-owner of the New York Yankees, would buy the Brooklyn Dodgers for a syndicate headed by the Reynolds tobacco interests, was partly spiked by Stephen W. McKeever, 81-year-old president of the Dodgers.

"I have not seen Col. Huston, he has never made me an offer, and the club is not for sale," roared McKeever.

Frick Refutes It.

"Huston offered $1,500,000 for the dodgers last spring," Frick said, "and the colonel told me during the World Series he still was interested."

McKeever made the only other official announcement of the day, saying Casey Stengel's successor as manager of the Dodgers would not be named for some time.

Commissioner K. M. Landis started the exodus toward the hunting and fishing grounds. The judge left for Burt Lake, Mich., to fish for two or three weeks. Col. Rupert, owner of the new world champions, and his business manager, Ed Barrow, will take a trip to the Adirondacks. After a week there they will return to New York, leaving again on election day for a month's vacation at French Lick, Ind.

DiMaggio On Stage.

"I'm going to sleep for a week and then go hunting," he said.

Bill Terry, manager of the Giants, will stay in New York until he has completed the club's spring schedule and then go to Memphis to rest and have his lame knee treated. While most of the players relaxed, Joe DiMaggio prepared for the most frightening experience of his life—a vaudeville tour with his ball-playing brother, Vince, member of the San Diego Pacific Coast League team.

"I'm away behind on my tap-dancing lessons," Joe said. "I gotta start working."

Rumors Run Riot.

The series-batting hero, Jake Powell, was the happiest man in town but he didn't stay around long.

"Boy, I'm going home to Washington to see my wife and my little girl, Joan," he said, "and then we're all going on a vacation somewhere. This should be the happiest winter of my life. It was really a break for me when I was traded to the Yanks."

With the series over, the peddlers of legend were busy. Central figures in their stories were (1) Rogers Hornsby, reported on the way out as manager of the Browns; (2), Chuck Dressen, Cincinnati pilot who supposedly does not fit into the schemes of Warren Giles, new general manager of the Reds; (3), Jimmy Wilson, Phillies manager, who is rumored to be tottering, and (4), Bill Terry, who is said to be moving into the Giants' front office and turning his old job over to Bill McKechnie, of the Boston Bees.

Ole Miss Eleven Seeks Revenge Tomorrow

Camp Letts, Md., Oct. 7.—It will take at least two touchdowns—two more than George Washington makes, to appease Mississippi Friday night when it tears into George Washington at Griffith Stadium in the first major gridiron battle of the season.

Successive defeats by Tulane and Temple, the first by a 7-6 margin and the second lost in the last minute of play, have left the Southerners in anything but a peaceful frame of mind. Strangers in camp feel like a couple of Communists in Italy, and the air is charged with an electrifying atmosphere that bodes no good for the downtown school.

Coach Ed Walker is stressing defensive play during the team's encampment here, at the same place, incidentally, used by the Colonials for three weeks of pre-season work. Offensive maneuvers are not being neglected, however, but Walker feels that it is more important to build up the defense at this stage. The Rebels proved their mettle against both Tulane and Temple, offensively, but were found wanting with the other team in possession of the ball.

While George Washington has been warned to stop Ray Hapes, Mississippi's All-America candidate and one of the fastest humans in a football uniform, the Colonials will do well to keep a weather eye open for Dave Bernard, a husky halfback who performs five chores well. A broken field runner of first water, Bernard also hits the line with gusto, blocks, punts and passes. He can easily be the star of the game.

Peacock, Novice, Wins Title in Club Throwing Contest

Roger Peacock, two-time District and Maryland amateur golf champion, who never has been known to throw a golf club as a gesture of disgust, yesterday turned out to be a champion in that field of endeavor.

Nuvolari Tops Qualifiers for Auto Race

By the Associated Press.

Westbury, N. Y., Oct. 7.—Tazio Nuvolari, Italy's automobile speed ace, led the second day's qualifiers for the George Vanderbilt Cup, which will be raced over 300 miles Monday, when he was clocked in 17 minutes, 9.62 seconds for the 20-mile test today.

Nuvolari's performance as he skidded around hair-pin turns and surged up the main straightaway at 150 miles an hour was the fastest time yet registered on the new 4-mile circuit. The Italian's average of 69.929 miles an hour was almost 3 miles an hour better than that of Count Brivio, his Italian teammate, who led yesterday's qualifiers. Nuvolari's best lap averaged 70.1 miles an hour.

Bob Swanson, of Los Angeles, who has been driving in the midget races; Chuck Tabor, of Orange, N. J.; Chet Gardiner, of Los Angeles; Pat Fairfield, of England; Philippe Etancelin, of France, and Emil Andres, another Los Angeles driver, also completed their qualifying tests, finishing in order named.

Red Mays, of Glendale, Calif., narrowly escaped serious injury when his Miller Special crashed into the concrete retaining wall at the east end of the main stretch. Mays escaped with a severe shaking up but the car was so badly damaged it is doubtful if it will start in the race. If he does not have a car of his own, Mays will drive relief for Babe Stapp.

Stapp, Lord Howe, of England, and Freddy McAvoy, of Australia, tried to qualify but Howe was forced out when he went into a spin on a turn while the cars of the other two developed engine trouble.

C. U. to Depend On Passes in La Salle Tilt

Catholic University's old football by-word "They shall not pass," has been tossed into the discard for Saturday's game with La Salle and a policy of fighting fire with fire has been decided on as the best means of combating the air-minded Explorers. If the Cards do match the visitors' passes, throw for throw, it will look more like a basketball game, for the one thing La Salle is proficient at is pass heaving.

Assistant Coach Tom Whelan scouted La Salle against Canisius last Sunday in Buffalo, and saw Marty Brill's men go up in the air, but for a good purpose, turning almost certain defeat into a 19-14 victory. The week before Whelan saw the Explorers pass their way to a 27-6 win over Niagara, scoring five of their seven touchdowns in two games on forwards.

Mainspring in the attack was Harry Williams, 185-pound halfback, who gets the ball away like a big-league catcher pegging to second base. Short and stocky, Williams, according to Whelan, is the best passer he has seen in two years of scouting and looks like one of the best ever to play in the Brookland stadium.

La Salle a Little Heavier.

Also impressive was Capt. Joe Sciarretta, punting quarterback, who rolled up a 55-yard average in the first two games. Catholic met this gentleman last season, and although it won handily, all of its scoring drives had to be launched deep in its own territory because of his lengthy boots.

La Salle will match Catholic pound for pound in the line and will have a slight advantage in the backfield, which may accentuate the passing game. But if the Cardinals have to go into the air they will be well prepared with Bill Adamaitis and "Dixie" Walker doing the passing, and Hermie Schmarr, Zeke Brown, or any one of a half-dozen others catching.

Reports from Knights of Columbus headquarters, indicate that at least 2,000 members will attend the game, which looms as one of the best of the early-season attractions. The Philadelphians pulled a surprise two years ago, holding the home team to a scoreless tie in the mud at Brookland.

The Glen Riddle Farm's 3-year-old Army and Navy, by American Flag, which was sired by Man o' War, scoring in the third race at a mile and 70 yards yesterday. Ridden by J. Lynch, Army and Navy surged from sixth in the stretch to beat out Kenty, the betting choice.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

Hindsight is better than foresight in any league, of course, but the impression is growing with this department that the National League brand of baseball is very inferior to the American League's.

And the bare fact that the Yankees beat the Giants so emphatically in the 1936 World Series is not the only evidence. Thumb the record books and you find that the American League has taken 9 of the last 14 World Series championships. If that is mere coincidence, I'm Gable.

POVICH.

Throughout last week there was serious doubt in the press box at Yankee Stadium and the Polo Grounds that the Giants could have finished in the first division of the American League. Despite their handy victory in the National League pennant race, they did not appear to be a good ball team. Yet they were the best the National League had to offer.

Like virtually every other National League World Series entry of the past decade, the Giants were typically National League; that is, they lacked punch. In contrast to the swagger and slam of the Yankees, the Giants appeared to be begging for runs every time they appeared at the plate. When they needed a run or two, they could only hope to squeeze it across the plate. They couldn't hit straight away.

Contrastingly, when the Yankees needed runs, they were usually able to go out there and hammer 'em across the plate. The sacrifice, the long fly and the stolen base was not an important part of their run-scoring program. They played for runs in clusters and usually got 'em. But the Giants were up there with a prayer and eye to getting a runner around to third base where a long fly would score him.

If the Giants were, indeed, the best the National League had to offer then the National League is in a sorry state. Because Hubbell alone was their only great pitcher and at two key positions in the infield the Giants had doddering old veterans who would be hooted out of the American League.

For Manager Bill Terry at first base there is excuse. A painfully injured knee has doubtless ended his playing days, but the fact remains that the Giants were able to win with a first baseman who was strictly on the silver standard; that is, he couldn't get off a dime when a ground ball was hit his way, and virtually every time he did make a stop, the giant pitcher had to hustle over to first base to take a throw because poor Terry could hardly make it to the bag himself.

And at third base, the Giants had Travis Jackson, a grand performer in his time—in his time. But Jackson this season was definitely on the sunset side of his career, slowed to a walk. Ground balls that he would have fielded in his sleep in his salad days whizzed by Jackson now as if he were rooted to the earth. American League pitchers would shout murder at that kind of fielding support.

There is ample evidence, too, that the National League is a haven for washed-up American Leaguers who couldn't stand the pace in the latter league. The Giants themselves had two players in the series who were turned out of the American League with the notation: "Won't do."

Blond Dick Coffman wasn't good enough for the seventh-place Browns, yet he was the relief ace of the Giants. After Mark Koenig was unwanted in the American League he helped both the Cubs and the Giants to pennants. Danny MacFayden, a washout with the Yanks, is a star with the Braves.

On the other side of the picture there is, of course, Pat Malone, of the Yankees, who was fired by the Cardinals, but it was Malone's obstreperous conduct, not his pitching failures that eased his path out of the National League.

And you do know that last week the White Sox, third-place team in the American League, licked the Cubs, who tied for second place in the National, in four straight games in the Chicago city series. Coincidence?

Weeks Elected A. A. U. Head In District

Dr. Singer Is Named Vice President; Griffith Eppley Are Named.

The District Amateur Athletic Union last night set up a new regime, electing A. Earle Weeks, a member of the National A. A. U. swimming committee, as president to succeed William E. Russell.

Weeks, a member of the Washington Canoe Club, was installed as leader at the annual meeting at the Knights of Columbus Hall—the third president since the organization of the local A. A. U. seven years ago. As a tribute to Russell's untiring efforts during the last five years, the A. A. U. elected him an honorary president.

Other officers named were Dr. O. U. Singer, of Congressional Country Club, first vice president; Dorsey Griffith, Catholic University, second vice president; Geary Eppley, Maryland University, third vice president, and Winfree Johnson, of Welfare and Recreation department, secretary-treasurer.

Delegates to national convention—William E. Russell, Johnson, Aronoff, Sullivan, Weeks and Edward Rosenbloom.

Handicapper, track and field—Yank Robbins.

Nominating committee—Weeks, Singer, Foster, Sullivan and Aronoff.

Olympic Riders In Bike Race Here

"This thing threatens to be the biggest thing of its kind in the East, and I'm not kidding."

So spoke Winfree Johnson, of the second National Capital Bicycle Sweepstakes to be run Sunday at 2 p. m. in Potomac Park under the auspices of the National Capital Parks and the Welfare and Recreational Association, and he had ample cause for his enthusiasm. The field attracted for this event is one of the most outstanding this city has ever seen.

No less than three Olympic team members, two State champions, a national titleholder and last year's national champion are included among the entries he has received.

The Olympic riders are Paul Nixon, of Palisades, N. J.; John Sinibaldi, of Union City, N. J., and William ("Buster") Logan, of Newark, N. J. Logan captured the fancy of local fans last November when he won his Olympic berth as a resul of his work in the National Capital Bicycle Sweepstakes.

Minnesota, Ohio State Face Major 'Title' Foes

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Oct. 7.—Four huge packages of gridiron dynamite will be touched off under the national championship situation Saturday.

The explosions, probably as loud and devastating as will be heard this season, will occur at Minneapolis, where mighty Minnesota, undefeated since 1932, collides with Nebraska's Cornhuskers, and at Columbus, where Pittsburgh hurls its power against Ohio State's "Scarlet Scourge."

Each ranks as a contender for national honors, and with that ranking as well as hopes for Rose Bowl bids for Nebraska and Pittsburgh, at stake, nothing will be held back in the two big attractions of the week.

Gophers Favored.

The Gophers, still hammering away at a row of consecutive victories that has reached 18, are favored to wreck Nebraska's hopes, just as they did last year. The Cornhuskers, with brilliant backs in Sam Francis, southpaw shot-putter on the 1936 American Olympic track squad; Lloyd Cardwell and John Howell, and a sound line, apparently are improved over a year ago. They opened last week with an easy 34-to-0 victory over Iowa State College.

But, in their single start, in which they conquered a fine Washington eleven, 14 to 7, the Gophers indicated they are as potent as last year, and a Nebraska triumph would be nothing short of a terrific upset. Bernie Bierman has another one of those lines, and lavish backfield talent in Julie Alfonse, Rudy Gmitro, Andy Uram, Bud Wilkinson, Whitman Rork and Tuffy Thompson, among others.

Managoff to Meet Kampfer Tonight

Ivan (Mangler) Managoff and Hans (Campfire) Kampfer, two of the rudest gentlemen in the grappling business, will have it out in the feature wrestling match at Turner's Arena tonight.

The exhibition takes on the nature of an international hair-pulling contest, as Managoff is a Rooshian and Kampfer is a German. The burping is scheduled to last to a one-fall finish, with a two-hour time limit.

Jim Wright and Cliff Olson will perform in the semifinal, which has been shortened to 30 minutes instead of the usual 45 because Promoter Joe Turner figures if those two boys can't pull each other to pieces in half an hour, what the hell.

Irish Jack Donovan, the perennial heart-throb, will battle his way through a cordon of admiring females to enter the ring against Henry (Steamboat) Piers. Piers is substituting for Frank Judson, who was injured in a bout last Saturday.

Matros Kirilenko, one-time best drawing card in the District, will return to the local wars against Harry Finkelstein in another 30-minute time limit bout. John Katan will engage Cy (Sigh) Williams in the remaining contest for half an hour.

Maryland to Use Passes Saturday

While loaded to the hilt with veteran backs adept at the fine art of carrying the ball, backing up a line, etc., etc., the trend of practice at College Park this week indicates that a sophomore, Charley Weidinger, may play the most important role in Saturday's game with North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Weidinger, rated the finest passer to come up to the varsity in recent years, is the key man in Maryland's passing attack, and the Terps are counting heavily on their passing attack for valuable yardage against the Tarheels. The Baltimore boy, who was, incidentally, a star pitcher on the freshman baseball team, can knock 9 cents off a dime at 20 paces and has the invaluable knack of getting the ball away under the worst circumstances.

Coleman Headley, broken-field runner par excellence; "Jumbo Jim" Meade, sophomore line-crusher, are expected to bear the brunt of Maryland's running attack, and Carolina will see two exceptionally good men when they step down on the accelerator.

Buckeyes Get Drill on Pitt's Offensive

Panthers Work in Rain on Ohio State Passes for Game Saturday.

By the Associated Press.

Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 7.—Ohio State freshmen, using Pittsburgh plays, tested the Scarlet varsity's defense strength in scrimmage today as Coach Francis A. Schmidt primed his squad for the struggle with the Panthers Saturday.

Then the yearlings, changed to the defensive and messed up several of the big fellows' prize ground-gaining plays.

Panthers Drill in Rain.

Pittsburgh, Oct. 7.—Coach Jock Sutherland drilled his unbeaten University of Pittsburgh football team in rain and mud today, determined, he said, to "sink or swim" at Columbus Saturday with his fast-running attack.

He said his defense against the powerful Ohio State Buckeyes would be his offense.

All-English Girls' Hockey Team Beats Baltimore

Baltimore, Oct. 7 (AP).—The all-Baltimore girls' field hockey team lost to the all-England team today, 9 to 0.

The English aggregation made four goals at an easy pace in the first half and five more in the second. Four of these came in the last ten minutes of play, with Jane Dickinson, vice captain, making them in quick succession.

Baltimore got within the striking circle twice in the last half, but each time was headed.

Windsor Withdraws.

Windsor, Ontario, Oct. 7 (AP).—After two days of consideration, directors of the Windsor Hockey Club today announced definite withdrawal of the Bulldogs from competition during the coming season.

Team Lacked Conditioning For Game

2 Lost for Season Due to Being 'Brittle,' Says Coach Hardell.

By John R. Vosburgh.

McKinley Tech High School officials yesterday were blamed by Coach Elmer (Hap) Hardell for the injury of five of the school's football players in the game last week against Episcopal High.

HARDELL.

Charging that Tech officials refused to permit the football squad to use the school's new stadium, Hardell attributed the injuries to the team's lack of practice and lack of proper physical condition.

Yesterday, for the first time, were the Tech players given permission to use the field, which was freshly laid last summer. As a result, Hardell, declared, his team entered the game against Episcopal without sufficient practice—only one workout in nearly two weeks.

"It's a fine field we're practicing on now," said Hardell, "but that isn't bringing back Sachs and Rassier to our team. If we had had this field two weeks ago, we'd probably have those two playing right now. As it is, they're probably too badly hurt to rejoin us this season.

"It's Criminal."

"It's pretty near criminal," he said, "to expect boys to play games without any practice. It makes 'em either soft or brittle. I was scared to death when that Episcopal game came around."

The coach was afraid the boys would get hurt because he hadn't had any place for them to practice. And they did get hurt. Tech lost the ball game, 13 to 0, but that wasn't the worst of it.

One by one the coach watched his unconditioned youngsters crack up. First Roderick Clay, his center, was knocked out, and had to be led off the field. Then Carl Sachs, his ace back, had to be carried off the field with a twisted knee. He'll be lucky if he can play again this year. Then Joe Pallas, little guard, and Stan Wells, fast-stepping quarterback, were put to sleep in a row and Jack Rassier, regular backfield man, pulled a ligament in his leg which will keep him out of action indefinitely. The entire squad was pretty well-banged up.

Got to Have Contact.

"You've got to have body contact practice if you expect boys to play football," Hardell went on. "That means scrimmage. In two weeks before that Episcopal game we had one scrimmage—that holiday when the G. A. R. marched and we were able to go out to Maryland. The only other practice was some exercises on the dirt there across the running track."

The coach thinks it's a wonder no more serious injuries occurred in the Episcopal mishap. After that game Franklin School officials took a hand in the situation and persuaded the school to let the coach use the new field. Now, he says, the boys will be in condition for Gonzaga.

"They won't crack up now," he said. "We've had enough rough work to get 'em in shape. But let me tell you, that Episcopal game was a nightmare. More Tech boys got hurt in that game than in any one since I've been coaching."

Rolling Rock Hunt To Eastern Shore

By the Associated Press.

Ligonier, Pa., Oct. 7.—Mrs. P. Ambrose Clark's big black gelding Eastern Shore easily won the Rolling Rock Hunt Cup race over a brushland course at the Rolling Rock Country Club today.

Ridden by J. V. Davis, the speedy, Virginia-bred 5-year-old finished 20 lengths ahead of Disport, owned by Mrs. Simon T. Patterson, of Pittsburgh, and Forbes, entered by L. W. Robinson, jr., of Indiana, Pa., to win the $1,000 purse.

Billy Bee Beats Where Away to Win Feature Race at Laurel

Form Players Jolted in 6 Events

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent.

Laurel, Md., Oct. 7.—The Bomar Stable's busy sprinter, Billy Bee, won his eighth race in 24 starts this year in the grade "A" Handicap, feature event of the midweek program at this track. Excellently handled by Jockey M. Peters, Billy Bee bounded to the imaginary wire two and a half lengths ahead of A. Pelleteri's Where Aaway, the heavily played favorite. C. V. Whitney's Roustabout came from far back to salvage third money in the vest-pocket field of five sprinting at 6 furlongs.

Billy Bee was sent away on top, but Jockey Peters was not lured into running his mount into the ground when Chief Cherokee, under hustling tactics, went into command at the far turn. Peters took his mount in hand, steadying him to the stretch, where Chief Cherokee gave up. Billy Bee then regained the lead and was kept to a drive ahead of the fast-closing Where Aaway.

Lemont had been a forward factor for 5 furlongs, but tired in the late stages, and Roustabout, hard ridden by Jockey H. Richards, was up in the concluding strides to annex the show money.

Billy Bee ran the three quarters in 1:11 4-5 and was second choice in the wagering, paying an $8.20 mutuel.

Summer-like weather prevailed and a crowd of 8,000 saw the program conducted over a lightning-fast track.

Masked Queen, a winner by eight lengths in cheaper company last out, scored an easy victory over a field of seven in the sixth race over the mile-and-a-quarter course. The filly galloped home four lengths ahead of Flag of War and nine lengths ahead of Naval Cadet. The winner paid a $22.40 mutuel and was timed in 2:05.

Little Maxie, owned and trained by Mary Hirsch, proved much the best of a group of juveniles contesting in the first race of today's program at this track. The upset colt forged to the front almost with the starting bell, but ran far out at the stretch turn and seemed to have lost all chance. However, Apprentice Jockey H. LeBlanc straightened the colt, put him to a drive and the juvenile came on again to win by a length and a half from Lady Briar, one that paid $49.50 to place. Third money went to the favorite, Panther Creek. Little Maxie was well played and paid a $7.70 mutuel. He ran the 6 furlongs in 1:13 4-5.

More News Pays $43.

J. B. Belk's Wise Sister, which campaigned on the small tracks during the summer, came through with a surprising victory in the second race over the 6-furlong course. The Wise Counsellor filly led Leon J. Marks' Muggins to the wire by three lengths with Ampersand, the heavily played favorite, beaten a neck for second money. Ampersand was in front at the far turn but Wise Sister circled her rival to take command and held sway thereafter. She was LeBlanc's second winner in a row. Wise Sister paid $31.20 and was clocked in 1:12 3-5.

The Glen Riddle Farm's Army and Navy ran a remarkable race to win the day's third event by a neck margin from E. R. Pike's Kenty. Third money went to Black Boo an extreme outsider. Army and Navy met interference going to the first turn, but Jockey Lynch put him to a drive entering the stretch and the American Flag colt put on a rush that could not be denied. Kenty, one that went to the front at the far turn, was a solid second a half length ahead of Black Boo. Army and Navy paid an $11.10 mutuel, while running the mile and 70 yards in 1:45 3-5.

More News, ridden by Jockey Bobby Merritt, upset the dope in the Grade B Handicap, listed as the fourth race. The Misstep filly led from flag fall to finish in the 6-furlong contest. Count Rae came from far back to be second, beaten a length. Lady's Beau was third and another half length away. More News rewarded the faithful with a $43.50 mutuel and sprinted the route in 1:12 2-5. Count Rae was the favorite in the field of eight.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—WISE SISTER, $31.20, $11.00, $4.90; MUGGINS, $16.10, $6.10; AMPERSAND, $2.90.

WISE SISTER moved around on the outside of AMPERSAND leaving the backstretch, took command and easily held away thereafter. MUGGINS, off poorly, worked his way up on the inside and closed with good courage. AMPERSAND gained an early lead, but could not resist WISE SISTER and was tiring gradually at the finish. OLD FIELD closed a gap from a slow beginning. PATSEY BEGONE faltered after moving up menacingly. SINGING HEART could not threaten at any stage. BRANDON MINT had early speed.

THIRD RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,000. For maiden 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 2:37½. Off at 2:46. Two-dollar mutuels paid—ARMY AND NAVY, $11.10, $5.40, $4.50; KENTY, $5.50, $5.10; BLACK BOO, $17.90.

ARMY AND NAVY, messed about going to the first turn, was steadied along in the second flight, came to the outside in the early stretch and with a belated rush and under severe pressure, was up in the concluding strides. KENTY raced wildly throughout, took command going between horses at the far turn and fought it out willingly. BLACK BOO, badly outrun for a half, saved ground under good handling to enter contention with a rush, but faltered in the last 20 yards. WATERMAN, quickest to begin, met interference from KENTY on the backstretch and tired slightly. PASSING EVE was in trouble at the first turn, gained sharply leaving the backstretch, but hung. BIAS was forced to race between horses and faltered. TEDDY THE BOLD lacked early speed. BABWRACK went well for a half. BIAS was squeezed back at the far turn.

DAILY DOUBLE PAID $59.30.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,100. Handicap, Grade B. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:16½. Off at 3:19. Winner, L. J. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MORE NEWS, $43.50, $9.70, $5.20; COUNT RAE, $3.90, $3.10; LADY'S BEAU, $9.80.

MORE NEWS, sent to the front at once, opened a gap swinging for the stretch and was kept to a drive to hold COUNT RAE safe. The latter, lucky to find racing room on the inside entering the stretch, came with a rush under punishment. LADY'S BEAU, rushed into contention along the rail from a early start, closed willingly and showed an excellent effort. LOVELY GIRL was forced to race on the outside throughout. SAVERNAKE ran wide at the far turn. BONNIE LOIS dropped back steadily after showing good early speed.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,200. Handicap, Grade A. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:48½. Off at 3:51. MASKED QUEEN, saving ground while close to the pace, came around FLAG OF WAR to take the lead entering the stretch and easily opened a long gap. FLAG OF WAR was hustled to the front at once, but could not resist the winner when put to a drive. NAVAL CADET, allowed to settle into best stride, saved ground, came through on the inside and gained gradually in the final stages. POMPOSITY went evenly but could not threaten. SOU'WESTER stopped after going forwardly. MR. BUN ran out at the first turn and tired.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward, foaled in Maryland. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:31. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SNOBBY SCAMP, $11.10, $5.20, $3.80; GOLDEN VEIN, $7.40, $4.30; WANDREL, $4.70.

SNOBBY SCAMP, quickest to begin, was taken back when MOON PENNY and GOLDEN VEIN went to the front, came willingly when placed to drive and gradually wore down GOLDEN VEIN after being headed within the last sixteenth. GOLDEN VEIN was rushed into contention at once, disposed of MOON PENNY and came courageously in the final test. WANDREL gained sharply leaving the backstretch, but hung. ENERGETIC LADY moved up with a rush at the far turn, but tired. POOP DECK closed well. MOON PENNY stopped. SIT OUT could not threaten.

Mrs. Goldsmith, Mrs. Pray Upset in 2 of 6 Club Title Semifinals

Mrs. Walper, Mrs. Stern Advance

By Dave Herman.

Two champions, Mrs. L. G. Pray, of Manor, and Mrs. Ralph Goldsmith, of Woodmont, were dethroned yesterday as the final round was reached in six women's club championships.

Marion Brown, 18-year-old star, eliminated Mrs. Pray, 3 and 1, in the semifinals at her club, and Janice Loeb, 19-year-old George Washington co-ed, removed Mrs. Goldsmith, several times Woodmont titleholder, 2 up, in the most startling upset of the day.

Miss Brown's victory, achieved when she shot near-par golf to win the last four holes after being one down going to the fourteenth, sent her into the finals against Mrs. C. P. Medley. Miss Brown scored an 82 as opposed to Mrs. Medley's 86.

Mrs. Gil Hahn will be Miss Loeb's opponent in today's Woodmont finals.

Mrs. Stern Wins.

At Congressional, Mrs. Roland Mackenzie, defending champion, eliminated Mrs. F. Dickinson Letts, 5 and 4, and Mrs. J. O. Rhyne put out Mrs. C. A. Stewart, 4 and 2. Mrs. Rhyne, medalist, and Mrs. Mackenzie, will meet this morning at 10.

The medalist and favorite at Army and Navy, Mrs. Charlotte S. Stern, scored an 86 while defeating Mrs. C. P. Clark, 3 and 1. Mrs. Stern will face Mrs. S. K. Robinson for the title today.

Mrs. J. W. Beller, defending champion, and Mrs. H. M. Brundage will clash for the title at Columbia Country Club. Mrs. Beller defeated Mrs. George B. McGinty, 2 and 1, and Mrs. Brundage eliminated Mrs. E. Amick, 5 and 4.

At Kenwood Mrs. Leo Walper, medalist and defending champion, played 11 holes in 5 over par, to conquer Mrs. A. A. Morrill, 9 and 7. Mrs. Walper turned in 37. She will oppose Mrs. A. A. McEntee, former champion, in the finals. Mrs. McEntee defeated Mrs. Theodore Lonnquist, 5 and 4.

Miss Houghton Leads.

Miss Elizabeth Houghton is setting the pace in the Chevy Chase women's champion. This tournament is conducted on a 54-hole medal basis, and at the end of 36 holes yesterday Miss Houghton was out in front by two strokes. Her brace of 88's topped Mrs. Ladra B. Platt's 89—89—178. Miss Louise Claytor was next with 92—90—182. Other scores: Mrs. Bishop Hill, 93—91—184; Mrs. Harrison Brand, 94—93—187; Mrs. Y. E. Booker, 92—96—188; Mrs. L. O. Lewis Unable To Fight Here As Planned

Light Heavy Champ Forced by Earlier Contract to Forego Affair.

Al Gainor, who recently battled Lewis to a standstill before a record crowd in Pittsburgh, will substitute for the ruler of the 175-pound division against Williams.

Lewis is scheduled to fight Len Harvey in London early next month. His contract calls for him to be in England at least three weeks before the bout. His manager, William Greenlee, had hoped the Harvey bout would be postponed, and on that hope agreed to fight here next Tuesday.

Yesterday Greenlee learned by cable that the British bout would not be postponed and he immediately asked Promoters Earl McDonald and Walter Young to release him from his Washington contract. McDonald left immediately for New York, from where he released Lewis as soon as he succeeded in signing Gainor as a substitute.

Greentree, in asking that Lewis be released from the projected fight here, agreed that Lewis would fight his first fight in the United States, when he returns, for McDonald and Young.

Buck Everett, heavyweight champion of the District, also may find his plans upset by Lewis' excursion to the other side. Buck is signed to meet Otis Thomas, a very promising colored prospect, in St. Louis, October 16. It was agreed that the winner of the Everett-Thomas bout would meet Lewis for the title a few weeks later, but it now seems that John Henry will not be here to fill that date either.

A Missed 18-Inch Putt Beats Mrs. Vare, 2 and 1

Philadelphia, Oct. 7 (AP).—A missed 18-inch putt on the sixteenth green eliminated Mrs. Glenna Collett Vare, the defending champion and six times national women's titleholder, from the annual Berthellyn Cup tournament today.

Mrs. J. J. Mitchell, of Philadelphia, won the hole and then the match, 2 and 1.

Central to Face Fork Union's Grid Team

Prep School Champions' Line Averages 182; Backfield 177.

Central High School's football team, which clashes with Fork Union Military Academy in Central Stadium tomorrow at 3:30 p. m., has heard all sorts of praise sung about its foe and unless it is in top form will find that it is all only too true.

Only three lettermen from last year are included in the Fork Union roster, but the team as a whole has picked up where last season's representatives left off. The letter winners are the Rigler twins, Ralph and Raymond, 170-pound guards, and Frank Pogozelski, 180-pound halfback from Shamokin, Pa. The Riglers claim Hampstead, Md., as their home.

One man Central will have to bottle up is George Moyer, quarterback, who raced 65 yards for a marker against Naval Training School two weeks ago in a game which the Cadets won 13-0. The other touchdown was due to the line plunges of Robert (Truck) Trocolar, 190-pound quarterback, whose rib injuries received in last Friday's William and Mary freshmen game which ended in a scoreless tie, are expected to keep him on the sidelines tomorrow.

Fork Union won the prep school championship of Virginia and Maryland last fall when it defeated Devitt Prep, 26-7, in the "Bowl" contest held in Richmond and sponsored by an American Legion post of that city.

Virginia's Best Enter Show at Warrenton

500 Entries Listed for 2-Day Exhibition Set to Start Tomorrow.

By the Associated Press.

Warrenton, Va., Oct. 7.—The list of exhibitors for the Warrenton Horse Show, Friday and Saturday, for which more than 500 entries have been made, reads like a "Who's Who"' of Virginia horsemen and horsewomen.

Mrs. John Hay Whitney, of Llangollen Farm, has placed 19 horses in the competition of the two-day show, which will reach a climax Saturday afternoon with the presentation to the Corinthian Club winner of the John Barton Payne Memorial Trophy.

This trophy, which horse show officials value at $7,500, was financed by friends of the late head of the American Red Cross and will remain in the possession of the winner for a year. Admiral Cary Grayson, present head of the Red Cross, will present it this year, it was said by J. North Fletcher, show secretary.

The Mexican army team will bring six mounts to the show, other competitors will include Dr. L. M. Allen, of Winchester; Peach Brothers, of Upperville; Miss Anne Andrews, of Somerset; Miss Betty Couzens, of Pontiac, Mich.; Miss Elizabeth Nesbit, of Warrenton; U. S. Randle, Ray Shoemaker, of Harrisburg, Pa.; Webb Maddux, of Warrenton, and many others.

Show officials said $5,000 in cash and $9,000 in trophies will be awarded during the event. There will be five pony classes for children.

Two volumes of drawings by Gibson, loaned by Mrs. Waddy B. Wood, of Washington and Warrenton, were placed in the library here in an effort to make the "Gay Nineties" class historically correct, this event, set for 4:10 p. m. Friday, will be judged by Mrs. William Marshall and Mrs. Richard Wallach.

G. U. Off Tonight For Cincinnati

Topping off the hardest part of the week's work with a double drill, one staged last night under the lights at Griffith Stadium, a trim and determined Georgetown eleven will have one last signal practice this afternoon before leaving tonight for Cincinnati, where it clinches with the University of Cincinnati Bearcats Saturday night.

The stadium workout consisted only of punting and passing practice, but in the afternoon the varsity scrimmaged the freshmen who used Cincinnati plays. Coach Hagerty was well satisfied with the varsity's work and expects his men to stop the Bearcats as well as they did the freshmen. Only one change has been made in the line-up which started against Delaware—Tom Robertson going to tackle for Clem Stralka.

Hagerty will pick the 33 men to make the trip this afternoon and the party will leave at 10:35 p. m. The coach is scheduled to speak over Station WRC in Cincinnati tomorrow night at 6:45 o'clock.

Middies Work On Attack for Cavaliers

Navy Coaches Believe Tilt Will Be Toughest the Team Has Played.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 7.—Taking most seriously Saturday's game here with Virginia, the afternoon at the Naval Academy was devoted largely to offensive scrimmage. Tomorrow, the last hard practice will be held before the game, and offensive and defensive work will be mixed.

According to the Navy scouts, who saw Virginia in action against William and Mary Saturday, the Navy will be called upon to meet a stronger line than in its other two games. The Cavalier tackles, Weeks and Haskell, are powerful and active and most of the forwards compare well with Navy's in weight and strength.

While it is reported that Evan Male, who was so effective against the Navy last year, will not be able to play Saturday, the scouts liked the backfield work of Capt. Henry Martin and Pete Niestad, and have warned the local team against them.

Head Coach Tom Hamilton said this afternoon that he was unable to say whether Bill Ingram, Charley Reimann or Newell Thomas would be the first string backfield Saturday. Frank Case, Sneed Schmidt and Bob Antrim are sure of their places, but the other three were all used in this afternoon's practice.

Cy Emerich and Lou Powell, recently shifted from the backfield to the end group, were given work this afternoon in their new positions. Irwin Pike, regular end last year, who has not been in a match this season, is gradually increasing the amount of his work, and it is hoped he will be in shape shortly.

With the golf team traveling to Quantico, Va., to engage the Officers' Club team, Argyle's club championship final between Lou Harrison and Jock Olmsted has been postponed, along with the remainder of the matches, until next week. Defeated by Chevy Chase in its only match this year, Argyle is seeking its first victory.

Among those making the trip with the team to Quantico are Lou Harrison, club champ; Jock Olmsted, Worth Arnold, Tony Willmett, Sam Parks, Don Dudley, Sam Harvey, Maurice Cooper, Willard Turner, Capt. J. S. Bohlander, John Garner, Henry Chick, John Gardner, Cromwell Warner, Ray Lawrenson, Linc Johnston, E. S. Cassedy, Phil Brousseau, Wilbur Taylor and Perc LeDuc.

Spiders' Football Captain Is Laid Up

Richmond, Va., Oct. 7 (AP).—Capt. Mike West, University of Richmond football captain, was removed to St. Luke's Hospital for examination today after receiving a neck injury in blocking practice.

West's injury will be certain of keeping him out of the Franklin and Marshall game at Lancaster, Pa., Saturday, although Dr. Cullen Pitt, college physician, said the injury apparently was not serious. X-rays were made at the hospital but the findings were not immediately made known.

The injury of the star guard marred an otherwise promising session that brought rough scrimmage, trial of several new plays, dummy scrimmage and more passing maneuvers with George Spears, South Boston sophomore, on their receiving end. Coach Glen Thistlethwaite said that Spears would be a starter at halfback Saturday for the first time this year.

Out Fishin' by Jack Hawley

Fishing is so good at this writing that we advise all anglers contemplating a trip to their favorite fishing grounds this week-end to make their reservations now. To delay another day will mean you are going to fish from the shore, which is seldom successful. The writer, for example, made nine contacts before engaging a boat for Saturday and Sunday. As this goes to press 47 calls have been received for boats operating out of Solomons Island and St. Jeromes Creek for fishing over this week-end. 'Nough said.

The Post scores again. A few days ago we suggested that anglers might do well by fishing for two or three hours after dark, especially if still fishing (chumming). One ambitious party phoned us our reasons for this statement and stated that they intended to take a boat from Reedsville, Va., for the Middle Grounds, which we recommended. We replied "fishing at this season of the year is entirely different from that of spring or summer fishing in that fish gradually migrate to southern waters because of the gradual lowering of the water's temperature."

When this occurs, fishermen as a rule congregate on certain fishing grounds during the day with the expectancy of landing a good catch. The same condition prevails as has prevailed all season, too many boats on the same fishing grounds—too much noise from motor exhausts frightening fish. If these conditions which we have mentioned are true, then the proper time to fish would be at night when normal conditions would naturally prevail, with only a few boats occupying the fishing grounds from sunset until sunrise.

Last evening Capt. Taft Tippett (phone Great Mills 16-F-12), of Ridge, Md., advised us of the following: "Just heard that a party out of Reedsville, Va., landed 90 bluefish weighing from 3 to 5 pounds and another boat fishing nearby landed 55 in two and one-half hours. Both boats made their catches fishing from sunset until midnight as you recommended. Unless good weather is forecast for the Middle Grounds it is a mighty poor place to be in rough weather."

After yesterday's working hours Tippett landed several fine rockfish trolling at the mouth of St. Jeromes Creek, weighing on an average of 2½ pounds. Many are the big rock lurking in these waters and untrolled for until we attempted to try them out four years ago. Many will exceed the Maryland State law, which is prohibitive above 15 pounds, legal possession.

Channel bass which left Northwest Middles a few weeks ago have returned, arriving on Monday. The catches have been excellent.

Fishing for channel bass on N.W. Middles is done by "still fishing" and by the use of the peeler crab for bait. We recommend a small hardshell crab (alive). This bait is not only cheap but most alluring in that it is alive and crawls on the bottom of the sea, right in front of the bronze backed, overgrown member of the croaker family.

Steel Orders Are Heaviest In Seven Years

Ingot Output Rises to 75½ Per Cent, Top for 1936.

New York, Oct. 7.—"Steel companies enter the final quarter of the year with the largest unfilled orders since 1929, and in one respect the situation is more favorable than in that boom period because present commitments do not include the speculative purchases that then existed," says Iron Age in its weekly summary today. "Heavy ordering in the last week has brought another increase in steel ingot output to 75½ per cent, a new top for the year.

"While ingot production in September declined slightly from August, the total for nine months of 33,605,304 gross tons indicates a 1936 output of fully 46,000,000 tons, which would be about 85 per cent of 1929. Pig iron output figures, gathered by the Iron Age, show a September total of 2,730,293 gross tons, or 91,010 tons a day, a gain of 4.2 per cent over August daily rate. Seven additional furnaces went into blast, making a total of 155 on October 1.

"While the lighter steel products are in greatest demand, the heavy products have made substantial gains. As evidence, the Pittsburgh district, where heavy steels predominate, is now operating at 76 per cent, having for the first time since 1930 passed the average for the country as a whole.

"The sheet situation has reached a point where some users may not be able to obtain all they will want during the fourth quarter. A few mills are virtually out of the market on cold-rolled and light hot-rolled annealed sheets for the remainder of the year.

"As the automobile industry moves toward higher production of new models its requirements will increase. The farm implement industry has all but forgotten the drought and is proceeding toward increased output. Railroad buying of equipment and track supplies is on the upgrade. Of the major consumers of steel, only building construction shows a pronounced lag notwithstanding that Government aid has been expended mostly in that direction."

Cocoa Futures At Six-Year High

New York, Oct. 7 (AP).—Spurred by London buying and reports stocks on hand were lowest in years, cocoa prices for future delivery soared to the highest figures since August, 1930 in the New York Cocoa Exchange today.

Quotations were .13 of a cent to .15 of a cent higher. December deliveries were quoted at 7.60 cents a pound up .13 of a cent. Cocoa for May delivery advanced to 7.85 cents and for September, 1937 to 8.01 cents, all six-year highs.

Italian Stocks Are Higher as Markets Open

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Oct. 7.—Prices were higher as Italian stock markets were reopened today for the first time, not only since the devaluation of the lira, but also since the revaluation of the French currency.

The rise was restrained, however, by the new taxes which were imposed on corporations and individuals coincident with the lira devaluation decree.

Fiat Automobile jumped from 415 lire a share to 448, Terni Steel Works from 237 to 248, Montecattine Chemical from 136 to 178 and Snia Viscosa Chemical from 389 to 421. Prices of Italian government bonds were unchanged.

At one time during the day the stock exchange was forced to close temporarily to handle the traffic of hundreds of real property owners obeying the decree that they purchase bonds of the new 5 per cent loan equal to 5 per cent of the value of their property.

The new bonds were quoted at 91.90 lire, with early transactions taking place at 91.80 lire. The loan matures in 25 years and will be amortized by a 3½ per cent increase in the real estate tax.

Netherlands to Honor Gold Clauses in Bonds

Amsterdam, Oct. 7 (AP).—The Netherlands government, it was said authoritatively here today, intends to honor gold payment clauses in bonds sold on Dutch exchanges, despite its action in leaving the gold standard.

Decision with regard to the gold payment clauses in contracts and other obligations has been left to the justice and finance departments.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Meet Profit-Taking in 3-Million Share Session; Wheat Declines; Pound Lower.

New York, Oct. 7.—Government bonds continued their decline, but the more speculative industrial and railroad issues were firm with stocks. Trading in stocks was notable principally for its volume, the Stock Exchange enjoying its first sight of 3,000,000 shares since February. Prices were higher at the start, lost ground later and closed near the poorest, with the majority slightly better, but with comparatively small price changes in either direction. December wheat fell 1⅝ cents to 113 cents a bushel.

Most of the trading in stocks was directed toward the utility, railroad, steel, motor and oil shares. Utilities, in the background recently, gained ground, largely, traders surmised, because they have been neglected while other sections were advancing to new high prices. Advances were moderate. New high prices were paid for United States Steel and Bethlehem on small increases. Republic was active.

Chrysler led the motors to its best price since 1929. Most of the rise was lost in the last hour. General Motors was kept within a narrow range. Mack Trucks was a favorite. Standard was a leader of the oils. Ohio, Socony and Barnsdall were active. Rails were mixed. Santa Fe and Delaware & Hudson dipped and then recovered. Central was shoved up to a new top in the early dealing, but couldn't stay there. Southern Pacific and Katy were strong. Rubbers and sugars moved sharply higher. It was profit taking day in the farm implements. Declines were 1 and 2 points.

Sterling Declines.

Foreign exchanges were not especially active and the decline in sterling continued. Francs were steady. It is evident that with or without an agreement, sterling is being allowed to seek a more natural level near its old parity for the dollar—$4.86⅝. The United States Treasury, instead of coming to the support of the pound, now no doubt sees the light and is allowing the British and natural forces to have their way and bring down the pound. Action of foreign exchanges since the French took their step continues to encourage the hope that good will come out of it all; that world trade will be aided as the way is cleared for all round stabilization of currencies.

Remarks made by the British chancellor of the exchequer, Neville Chamberlain indicates that Great Britain is now willing to give currency stabilization serious consideration. However, the chancellor also assured his public that no monetary policy would be adopted which would bring about dearer money or other deflationary effects, and the London market hardened.

Demand Piling Up.

Trade news on this side was cheerful. Steel trade reviews emphasize the large volume of orders and predict maintenance of a high rate of production. With a good deal of obsolesence in the steel mills, the present rate probably is close to actual capacity. Certainly the number of employed is as high as in former times when the mills were reported running full. Wages, incidentally, are higher than in 1929, and if that trend is running through other industries, the outlook for higher prices is bright, in spite of high production, for the piled up replacement and repair demand in the country is enormous.

Morgenthau's Market Views.

"If Government bonds aren't safe, nothing is safe." That is a saying which has become axiomatic, not only in Wall street circles but over the country generally. In accepting the underlying truth in the suggestion that the credit of the individual and of the corporation scarcely could survive the collapse of Government credit, certain other eternal truths are overlooked. It is more than probable that Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, in his refusal to permit the Red Cross, with which he is connected, to purchase certain Pacific Coast public utility bonds and observing that investment principal was safe only when placed in United States Government bonds, made a slip merely through ignorance and had no sinister meaning.

House on Sand.

His reference to Government bonds as opposed to private obligations was, in other words, about on a par with the simple ignorance shown when a few days ago he announced that he had led a charge with the stabilization fund against Russia to protect the British pound. That, as the Secretary now has been informed, was merely a routine transaction, and in any event the British wished to see their money sink to a lower level vis-a-vis the dollar.

The Secretary of the Treasury and the public generally ought to realize that another fundamental truth is that if nothing is safe, neither is a Government bond. The Government is like a family unit. If pop, mom, sister and brother lose their jobs and money, the family is broke. If no corporation bond can be regarded as safe, then surely no Government bond is safe, for the Government credit rests on its ability to tax. If industry cannot meet its obligations the Government soon finds out that it can't meet its bonds and maintain its currency.

Communistic State and Credit.

It is doubtful if Secretary Morgenthau when, in referring to safety of principal, he wrote that "I feel I cannot indicate my approval for the purchase of any securities other than the direct obligations of the United States Government or obligations of Government by the United States Government as to both principal and interest," and when he disapproved the purchase of Pacific Coast utility bonds, intended to warn of a fresh Government crusade against the utilities. Nor is it likely that he was giving a hint of ultimate collapse of private industry and credit. He simply failed to realize that a government is superstructure; that private industry is the foundation. Such a failure to distinguish white from black would be excusable in one imbued with the doctrine of a communistic state, but it represented on the Secretary's part nothing more than ineptitude or awkwardness in expression.

Currency Tinkering.

Of more import is President Roosevelt's suggestion of an extension of his power to devalue the dollar. Authority to cut off another 10 cents will expire at the end of January. It may be that the President has no intention to use the power and wishes it merely as an ace to use in a stabilizatiion game with Great Britain and France, but the effect on general confidence is at least unpredictable. So long as a President at will can upset national and world economy by devaluing the currency it will be impossible fully to restore confidence.

Whether the President is giving speculators a hint, is reminding foreign countries of the realities of the position, or whether he has something else in mind can only be surmised. Possibly authority to devalue will mean no necessity to do so will arise; but no emergency exists, authority could be given at any time, and that is lots of dynamite to be left in the hands of so debonair a workman.

$15,000,000 Pepco Bonds Listed Here

104 Bid for New 3¼% First Mortgage Bonds.

The new issue of $15,000,000 Potomac Electric Power Co. 3¼ per cent first mortgage bonds, recently sold to investors, were listed yesterday on the Washington Exchange, one of the largest bond issues ever placed on the local board. The bonds were quoted at 104 bid, 104½ asked.

The new bond take the place of the Potomac Electric Power 6 per cent bonds, which were called for redemption on October 1 and dropped from the Washington Exchange list at that time. The old bonds were called in and the new $15,000,000 issue put out to save a substantial amount of interest for the power company.

Interest on the bonds is payable on January 1 and July 1. The bonds in this 3¼ per cent series are redeemable at the option of the company, in whole or in part by lot, on any day prior to maturity at 106 per cent of the principal if redeemed on or before June 30, 1938. After that date the premium decreases ¼ of 1 per cent each year. Back of the bonds is an unusually good record for earnings.

Check Is Urged On Imports of Japan's Cotton

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Oct. 7.—Frank I. Nield, president of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers, called today for "flood control" of Japanese cotton importations.

Nield, head of a New Bedford cotton textile firm, told the annual meeting of Northern cotton manufacturers that "goods made on the coolie wage scale of Japan can undersell goods made on the New Bedford wage scale in any market in the world.

"If the foreign trade of this country is to be purchased at the expense of domestic labor, I would say the cost is too high, and the effort to enlarge foreign trade should be held in check until the affect on our domestic labor is not destructive."

Nield asserted that protests to Washington against Japanese importations had "very little result." He said Japanese exports of textiles to this country had grown from almost nothing three or four years ago to millions of yards a month and are still growing.

"The Japanese," he continued, "have concentrated a few items but are constantly expanding the number of kinds of fabric to be exported, and at present we can see no end in this expansion in their efforts. The Japanese textile worker is paid about 30 cents a day, a small fraction of the wage paid here," he declared.

"It shows that a fair investigation was made," he said, "and that I never acted for Fokker in selling planes to anybody."

"It is curious," he said, "that these private documents relating to my discussions with Fokker should now be in the possession of Tichenor. It might be pertinent to ask him what his motive is in publishing such things—especially since he has never asked me for an explanation of this material or of my dealings with anyone else."

Roosevelt said his acquaintance with Tichenor began while he was employed by the National Aeronautical Association. Tichenor requested his support when a candidate for president of the aeronautical association, he said, but he declined to oppose the candidacy of Senator William G. McAdoo, who was elected.

"Apparently, he is trying to embroil me now in an argument," Roosevelt said. "But one man's word against that of another is of little value—it resolves itself into a question of one man's reputation against that of another."

Doesn't Deny Contract.

"I have never denied," he said, "that I discussed with Fokker arrangements for selling planes to the Soviet government, or that I even entered into a contract with Fokker.

"But the contract was canceled and returned to me. I never received a penny from Fokker for myself. I never acted for Fokker in any such sales. The contract, which subsequently was canceled, had provided specifically that I should no be requested by Fokker or any of his representatives to contact any representative of a European government or of the United States Government.

"It is obvious," he said, "that my father never had any part in my dealings with Fokker and I can see no reason why all of this should be brought out at this time, except a desire on the part of someone to besmirch the name of the President of the United States."

Fokker's statement to the Senate committee, dated September 18, 1935, said that he and young Roosevelt entered into an agreement on February 28, 1934, covering the expected sale of 50 planes to Russia "at an expected price to allow a commission of $500,000 to myself and $500,000 to Elliott Rosevelt."

Tichenor made public today a copy of what he said was this agreement between Elliott Roosevelt and Fokker, with G. W. Stratton as witness. It was dated Hollywood, Calif., February 26, 1934.

The purported agreement set forth that Roosevelt was to form a company called Elliott Roosevelt, Inc., and that "your corporation shall be paid by the Lockheed Sales & Export Corporation a retainer fee amounting to $25,000. Of this sum, the receipt of $5,000 is hereby acknowledged by you on behalf of your corporation, which sum was paid on February 6, 1934." it also set forth the terms of the sales commission to be paid.

Young Roosevelt said he could not be certain this was a true copy of the original until that document could be obtained from New York.

"I do know," he said "that no such corporation or company ever was formed by me; I received no such commission or retainer fee from Fokker or his associates; and a $5,000 check sent to me was never cashed, but was destroyed and payment on it was stopped at the bank, as an additional safeguard. Fokker did pay Stratton $5,000, but because of his expenses and services to Fokker, the money was not returned and I have in my possession a letter from Fokker saying he did not want it returned.

Nye Unit to Drop Study of 'Deal' Case

Unanimous decision of the Senate Munitions Committee not to delve deeper into an alleged sales contract between Elliott Roosevelt, 25-year-old son of the President, and Anthony H. G. Fokker, Dutch airplane promoter, was disclosed yesterday by Chairman Gerald P. Nye.

"The Elliott Roosevelt and Fokker matter was one to which the committee gave a great deal of attention," said Senator Nye.

"As it was studied, the first thing apparent was that the contract, if there was one, was not fulfilled, no business was done, and going into a public hearing would have resulted in but one thing—smearing of the President—which no member of the committee wanted to do."

The North Dakota Progressive Republican did not explain why the committee's position was not made clear on Tuesday, when he released a deposition, allegedly signed by Fokker in 1935, stating that Elliott and Fokker contracted in 1934 to sell military planes to Russia. The deposition said each was to receive $500,000 commission and Elliott was paid $5,000 cash.

Nye told reporters the affidavit was made public "in the interest of fair play to all concerned" following an intimation by the Aero Digest, an aviation trade magazine, that the committee was concealing evidence and facts.

He took entire responsibility for making public the deposition and said other members of his Senate Munitions Committee had nothing whatever to do with the matter.

"Obviously when an attack is made on the committee, charging it with having concealed evidence and facts, every member of the committee would resent it." Nye said.

"As a member of the committee, I thoroughly do, because at no time has partisanship been present on the committee. A great many ends of investigation have not been run down. We had to finish sometime."

Senator Nye received reporters yesterday noon soon after a hurried trip from New York. Later the Munitions Committee chairman left on an airplane flight to Ames, Iowa, where he is to speak tomorrow. He carried a brief case containing a number of committee documents with him.

Nye told reporters that Republican members of the Munitions Committee, including Senator Arthur H. Vandenburg, of Michigan, and Senator W. Warren Barbour, of New Jersey, concurred in the view that no hearings should be held on the incident, which he regarded as [illegible].

Text of Landon's Statement

The time has come for every American voter to get out a pencil and check recently issued New Deal figures. After adding and subtracting he will get results quite different from those reached by the President and his various spokesmen.

An ordinary knowledge of arithmetic, without even the use of a pencil, would show the fallacy of the President's recent statement at Pittsburgh that "over a billion and a half went for the payment of the World War veterans' bonus this year instead of in 1945" and "that payment is now out of the way and is no longer a future obligation of the Government."

Leaving out of consideration the question of the bonus itself, I would like to ask: If the billion and a half paid in bonus is not a future obligation, what is it? It was largely paid in bonds and some day the Government will have to pay those bonds.

With the President himself being so careless with facts and figures it is not surprising that his Cabinet members likewise are getting reckless Aid Also Target.

An illustration of the recklessness that has become epidemic in Administration circles is to be seen in certain statements made in Iowa by the President's agricultural spokesman. In making these statements he has totally ignored provisions of the Republican farm program which effectively safeguard the farm and the farm family.

This same agricultural spokesman is well known to the farmers of the Middle West for his prediction in August, 1935, that abandonment of the AAA would mean a return of "the unbearable situation of 1932 and 1933."

Every farmer knows what has happened since the Supreme Court invalidated the AAA, even though the President himself predicted 36-cent wheat and 5-cent cotton. Ever since the Supreme Court's decision the trend of prices of wheat, corn, hogs and cotton has been definitely upward except recently in the case of corn. This upturn, of course, was in part due to the drought, which the New Deal minimizes except as a political issue and when needed as an excuse for the taking of nonpolitical trips.

Cites Corn Situation.

With respect to corn, a look at the record should be of interest to both farmers and livestock feeders. On August 19 last cash corn reached its highest level since 1925 and corn futures a nine-year peak, with December corn quoted at 1.02¾. Then came the news that 20,000,000 bushels of Argentine corn was en route or contracted for shipment to the United States with other shipments expected in December, when the American crop is due to reach the market in most volume. The result of this news, made possible by the Administration's farm program, was a drop in nine days of 10 cents a bushel in corn delivered at Peoria, Ill., the great processing center.

With an estimated corn crop of 1,458,000,000 bushels each individual can draw his own conclusions as to what this has cost American farmers. In other words, President Roosevelt, through his own agricultural program, has sent $20,000,000 of American money to Argentina and the American farmers have lost far more by the transaction.

Farmers who by reason of the drought have to buy corn and cattle and hog feeders will get temporary comfort from the breaking of corn prices through importations of Argentine corn. The same policy which lets in the corn is letting in meat products not alone from Argentina, but from all the meat producing countries of the world.

"Leaving out of consideration the question of the bonus itself, I would like to ask: If the $1,500,000,000 paid on the bonus is not a future obligation, what is it? It was largely paid in bonds and some day the Government will have to pay those bonds."

(Mr. Roosevelt's speech dealt with the Federal budget, a subject Landon will discuss in Chicago Friday night.)

Landon did not specify the statements of Wallace to which he referred. After saying "Cabinet members are likewise getting reckless," the nominee added that "certain statements" made in Iowa by the "agricultural spokesman * * * totally ignored provisions of the Republican farm program which effectively safeguard the farm and farm family."

"This same agricultural spokesman is well known to the farmers of the Middle West," the Kansan continued, "for his prediction in August, 1935, that abandonment of the AAA would mean a return of 'the unbearable situation of 1932 and 1933.'

Trip Starts Tomorrow.

At the executive mansion last-hour preparations were under way for Landon's eight-day political tour starting tomorrow through Illinois, Ohio, Michigan and Indiana. Major addresses are scheduled for Chicago Friday, Cleveland Monday and Detroit Tuesday.

As these addresses were rushed to conclusion, Landon aids talked of possibilities of a campaign dash to Oklahoma between the trip starting tomorrow night and a final swing through the East. Officials said no decision had been reached.

A visitor today was former Gov. Gifford Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, en route to Wichita to speak in Landon's behalf. He also plans a series of Pennsylvania addresses.

"As far as I have gone," Pinchot told reporters, "I have been much impressed with the increased feeling toward Landon on the basis of his progressivism.

A reporter asked about the works progress situation in Pennsylvania.

"The WPA in Pennsylvania s just about as bad is anybody can describe it," the former Governor replied. "It is simply a political machine—nothing better than an adjunct to the Democratic campaign."

Landon's campaign special leaves Topeka at 7 p. m. (8 p. m. Eastern standard time) tomorrow, with two rear platform speeches scheduled in Illinois Friday before Chicago is reached at 11 a. m. The Illinois stops so far listed are Freeport and Rockford.

Discoverer Is Silent On Death Ray Details

Cleveland, Oct. 7 (AP).—Antonio Longoria, a physician who invented a welding process, which he is reported to have sold for $6,000,000, today declined on his return from a European trip to discuss at length a "death ray" he claims to have discovered.

"In the presence of witnesses," he said, "I've killed a pigeon with it at such a distance I couldn't see the pigeon without a high-powered telescope.

"I've killed rats and cats and dogs with it—but let's talk about something constructive. The death ray, so far as I can see, would be of no use excepting in war. And I don't like war."

Leaving at noon today, the President will go directly to Dubuque, Iowa, arriving there tomorrow morning. After brief stops in Dubuque and Oelwein, Iowa, he will head for St. Paul, Minn., where he will stop for several hours in the evening before turning south.

Traveling via Des Moines, and Afton, Iowa, where Senator George W. Norris, veteran Republican Progressive, will board the train, the President will arrive in Lincoln, Nebr., Saturday afternoon. After a stop of several hours, he will leave for Omaha, where he will make a major address at night.

Leaving Omaha at midnight, the Presidential special will drive across the prairies to Cheyenne, Wyo., where the President expects to attend church Sunday morning. After an all-day stay in Cheyenne, where he is scheduled to confer with Democratic chieftains from several Western States, he will leave Monday morning for Denver, where he will stay three hours and make a brief address before departing around noon Monday for Wichita, Kans.

At Kansas City Tuesday.

The President will travel the southern route, passing through Pueblo and La Junta, Colo., and Dodge City, Kans., before arriving in Wichita. From there he will go to Kansas City, Kans., by way of Emporia, and will motor across the Missouri River to Kansas City, Mo., arriving Tuesday afternoon.

After an inspection Wednesday morning of the much-criticized site for the Thomas Jefferson Memorial in St. Louis, Mo., the President will turn north for Chicago, where he will make the second major address of the swing Wednesday night.

Departing at midnight, he will arrive in Grand Rapids, Mich., next Thursday morning for a short stop and then proceed to Lansing, Mich., and thence to Detroit, where he will address an afternoon meeting. He is scheduled tentatively to leave Detroit about midnight, routed south to Cincinnati, where he will stop briefly the morning of October 16, before heading for Cleveland by way of Middletown, Dayton, Springfield and Columbus, Ohio. Reaching Cleveland in the late afternoon of that day he will remain an hour before going to Niagara Falls.

At Niagara Falls Saturday morning he will change to an automobile and motor to Buffalo, and from there will go to Rochester, Syracuse, Utica and Albany, where he will confer with Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York before returning to Hyde Park the afternoon of October 17.

The President's campaign plans beyond the Western swing were not announced, and many observers believe he is reserving decision on his last drives until final pre-election trends in doubtful centers are more accurately determined.

It is widely believed, however, that he will make one vigorous trek into New England, possibly concentrating on Massachusetts, where the Democrats are conceded only an outside chance.

Hull Answers Landon's Trade Treaty Charge

and methods for carrying out a reciprocal trade program which would render it completely sterile and make it thus a sham and a fraud.

"The country will regret to see this discussion of our most vital economic problem and of constructive methods for dealing with it made the subject of confused, inaccurate and incoherent statements such as characterized the Governor's speech."

Hull pointed out that agricultural income had risen from $4,328,000,000 in 1932 to $6,507,000,000 in 1935, not including benefit payments. Cash income for 1936, Hull estimated, probably would approximate $7,500,000,000. This, he said, was to the credit of the Administration.

Turning to critics of the Canadian reciprocal trade agreement, Hull said that Governor Landon's figures on cheddar cheese were inaccurate. The Republican nominee said in his Minneapolis speech that the price had declined from 17 cents on January 1 to 12½ cents a pound and said it was due to the trade agreement.

"What he failed to state was that the price decline was a seasonal phenomenon; that his price quotation was several months old when he delivered his speech, and at the very time he spoke, the price of Cheddar cheese was over 17 cents—not 4½ cents below, but half a cent above the price on January 1," Hull explained. "It was 25 per cent higher than a year ago at the same time when there was no agreement with Canada.

Highest Since Depression.

"And let me add that today it is higher than at any time since the depression began."

Hull than took up the babassu nuts and oils, the second commodity cited by Gov. Landon. The Secretary said that the Smoot-Hawley act, passed during the Hoover Administration, permitted the same treatment of these imports as the trade agreement—a place on the free list.

Discussing the decline in cattle prices, which Gov. Landon had cited, Hull admitted that there had been a decline, particularly for fat cattle

"But attempts to explain the decline on the basis of the Canadian agreement simply fail to stand up under scrutiny," he added.

The Secretary explained that the duty cut was limited to a quantity of cattle not to exceed three-quarters of 1 per cent of our average annual slaughter; that even with the reduction the duty was left as high as under the Fordney-McCumber act, and that the abnormal supplies of fat cattle were due to the large marketings of domestic animals.

Regarding drought imports, Hull insisted that no reciprocal trade agreement had made any tariff reductions on wheat, corn, rye or oats.

Imports Are Temporary.

"Our critics have not the fairness to admit that these emergency drought imports are temporary in character and will disappear as the effects of the drought wear off," Hull said.

Other pork, pickled or salted, 329 per cent increase.

Of the $1,106,000,000 of agricultural imports in 1935, Hull said that $484,000,000 were "entirely noncompetitive commodities as coffee, tea, cocoa, spices, bananas, carpet wool, sisal, unmanufactured silk and crude rubber."

During 1935, the Secretary said that an increase of only $13,000,000, exclusive of sugar, which is governed by international agreement, was in commodities affected by trade agreements. The total increase in 1935 agricultural imports amounted to $247,000,000, of which $75,000,000 represented wholly noncompetitive products.

Mrs. Atwell and Fiance Accused of Intoxication

Westport, Conn., Oct. 7 (AP).—Town Prosecutor Earl H. Jagoe reported today the arrest of Mrs. Roy Atwell, former wife of the radio comedian, and her fiance, Cyril Tolley, namesake and nephew of the British golfer, on charges of intoxication and breach of the peace.

Tolley and Mrs. Atwell obtained a marriage license last week in Stamford. The Atwells were divorced in Bridgeport earlier this year. Jagoe said Mrs. Atwell and Tolley had each provided $200 bail pending their appearance in court October 15.
